SPLENDID CONDITION OF THE ARMY.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Nov. 20.

Your correspondent at Falmouth sends the following:

"Yesterday the rebel pickets made their appearance on the opposite bank of the river, and are now within easy musket range.

Last night the rebel pickets had the audacity to venture upon the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, and burn a bridge near Catlett's Station.

Scouts report the rebel Gen. BAILEY at Hedgeman's Mills, with 3,000 men; and Gen. MAXEY near the same place with a like number, and a rebel force of 10,000 near Abbey's and Snicker's Gaps.

A refugee just in says a rebel force of 8,000 men was in Warrenton on Tuesday night, and last night and advanced as far as Gainesville.

A party sent out by the Twenty-sixth Wisconsin Regiment, near Gainesville, returned last night, having accomplished the object of their mission.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Nov. 20.

Information from the Army of the Potomac, to-day, is to the effect that the rebel cavalry recently approached Warrenton to reconnoitre, but Gen. PLEASANTON, with his cavalry, gave them a severe check near that place.

Accounts from Falmouth, dated to-day, state that during yesterday afternoon the enemy's pickets were scattered along the banks of the Rappahannock, and conversed freely with our men, but no firing took place. Only one small camp of the enemy was visible last night.

OUR SPECIAL ARMY CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER FROM FALMOUTH.

Details of the Movement of Gen. Burnside's Army to Falmouth—The Prohibitions.

FALMOUTH, OPPOSITE FREDERICKSBURG, VA., Tuesday, Nov. 18, 1862.

The long-range cannon that have for the past hour been engaged in silencing a rebel battery planted across the Rappahannock, opposite us, in Fredericksburgh, have ceased their thunders. We are safe in the town of Falmouth, and at length it is possible to send you word of the operations of the past three days. [illegible] by the time this reaches you, the Army we left will doubtless have formed a junction with us here. The whole army—will then be massed here, and thence marched on to—but we shall see what we shall see. If it be toward that charmed house, Richmond, where, according to the official returns, more than a hundred thousand sick and wounded victims of the rebellion lie, we have now the satisfaction to know that but sixty miles—a three hours' ride by the Richmond, Fredericksburgh and Potomac Railroad—intervene between us and there—that is, so much space intervenes. But what material obstacles are to be encountered, and what passages of glory or gloom are before us are that intervening space be traversed, is not within the scope of mortal ken. When we left Warrenton, on Saturday, it was the opinion of some well-informed men that the Confederates would abandon Richmond, and show no fight between here and that point; and in support of this opinion it was urged that they had already sent their treasure southward to Danville, N. C., and were fast sending their stores in the same direction. We find little to countenance this hypothesis as we approach the rebel Capital. If a movement is made against it, we shall doubtless find it met by the same desperate and skilled resistance that has thus far barred our progress Richmond-ward. There appears to be little doubt that, with the exception of JACKSON's command—which at the latest advices was at Front Royal and holding Chester Gap—and STUART's Cavalry—which hangs around our flank and rear—the main body of the Confederate army has been drawn down and massed immediately around the rebel Capital and on the lines of approach thereto. I know nothing, of course, of what the intentions of Gen. BURNSIDE are, but it is a proof of the fresh life and spirit infused into the army, that every man's thoughts again turn Richmond-ward. A little faith springs up in our languid and skeptical souls. It begins to seem possible that we may attack and take that rebel stronghold. Do not count this small progress, for under the late régime of "impossibilities," that faith had died out of mens minds, and no prompting more vigorous than Winter quarters possessed them. One thing is satisfactory—we shall presently know our fate. Christmas will either see us in Richmond, or shattered in overwhelming defeat. With our present forces, and skilled combinations on foot, we ought not to fear the latter. A hundred and fifty thousand men confidently anticipate the former.

"A multitude like which the populous North

Of the three days' march of the Right Grand Division, from Warrenton here, there is little or nothing to tell. Never was a more eventless expedition. Like XENOPHON's Ten Thousand, we marched each day so many "parasangs," but no incident such as diversified their progress broke the monotony of our weary way. It was early Saturday morning that the column moved from Warrenton. We went no further that day than the Junction, or rather to the point where the road from Warrenton crosses the railroad track, two miles west of Warrenton Junction—in all, thirteen miles. The day was delightful; the march was made with entire ease and in perfect good spirits, and that night we bivouacked by our camp-fires under the clear, cold starlight. At this halting-place there occurred a little incident, which, as illustrative of the practical "pushing" temper of the new Commander, is worth relating. Up to the moment of our leaving Warrenton, some of the regiments had received unsupplied with clothing. Burnside did not, as some men we wot of, wait till this business was attended to before hedging an inch; he sent on the men, and then sent the clothing after them, and late on that first night of our march the trains came up, and the Winter coats, socks, drawers, etc., were handed out to the men before they lay down. On the next day, at the next stopping place we found this repeated in the case of one or two other regiments that had not been supplied. We have thus been able to continue the march unintermittedly. It is a small matter, but it is typical of a multitude of just such business-like, common-sense things of BURNSIDE, and we augur, as you will, well from them.

Yesterday, (Sunday—another glorious day,) the march was resumed, and the day's tramp brought us on seventeen miles to our halting place, at a point known as the "Spotted Tavern." We were now wearing down from the White Ridge, along which we had been travelling, and had touched the sandy bottoms that run clean out to the ocean. The transition was curious. We were tramping over a new geologic era. The sea had, erewhile, washed the region and left argillaceous deposits along the whole track. But the suggestions around were not of geologic, but of human convulsions. On every hand we saw the marks left by the wrecking, rending volcanic cataclysm of War. That seventeen miles' march that day was literally through a desert. Not a stalk of corn, not a pound of fodder was seen along the entire route. Trampled fields, worn and burnt fences and the litter of camps told where armies—Union and rebel alternately—had been. The houses were few and mean; the people mean also—poor whites—and ignorant. How ignorant they are let an example tell: Late in the afternoon we arrived at a house, which Gen. SUMNER thought to make his headquarters. We found it shut up; but on going to an outhouse we discovered a white servant-girl with two or three children, cowering with terror; the man and his wife had fled to the woods, as they had been told by the Confederates that the "Yankees" were coming to burn the houses and murder the women and children. Incredible, is it not, that this should be told of Americans? It is only true, nevertheless.

Yesterday morning the march was once more resumed. We had bivouacked for the night but a dozen miles from Fredericksburgh, and as we took an early start, it was calculated we should reach our destination by noon. The morning opened moist and foggy, and it was found that bad weather was upon us; but though it has continued cloudy all day there has been no rain, and we hope still for a continuance of the marvelous weather we have had for the past month. We were now nearing the alluvial bottoms of the Rappahannock, and the change was perceptible in the improved farms and residences which we met on our route. Meanwhile, what we did not meet was an enemy. Forty miles, and not even a rebel vedette in sight! I think old SUMNER was thoroughly disgusted and disappointed. Fighting, you know, is his meat and drink, and to march through the enemy's country three days without so much as a taste of the luxury, was intolerable and not to be borne. We had approached within a mile and a half of Falmouth, when suddenly a battery from the Fredericksburgh side of the river opened upon us. The old war-horse pricked up his ears. It proved, however, to be a mere nibble. The enemy learning of our approach had planted a battery and designed to enfilade the road. It did not take long, however, for our artillery to feel their way off the road to the left, behind a piece of woods, which brought them out on a commanding position, within half a mile from the river. PERRY's, (First New-York Artillery,) OSMUN's (Company G, First Rhode Island,) and TOMPKINS' (Company A, First Rhode Island,) batteries were [illegible] for the occasion, and Company H, First Rhode Island, [illegible] The very first shell was planted so well as to burst in the midst of the rebel gun, causing an instantaneous stampede. Recovering their composure, however, they were able to dodge out and fire a few rounds. It was in vain. Their shots all fell harmless, not a man on our side being scratched, while every shot from our guns fell among them. Accordingly, they soon scampered off—a regiment of infantry and a squadron of cavalry going with them. It would appear that this was their whole force in Fredericksburgh, and thus far we have not yet learnt what damage was done. As our batteries were planted behind Falmouth and theirs behind Fredericksburgh, the firing was over both towns, and one can imagine what feelings the screeching shells flying over the heads of the population awoke in their minds. The Confederates are severely blamed by the people for remaining with their battery to provoke a fire on our part, and the blame is, indeed, well merited.

If, as is probable, it enters into the plans of Gen. BURNSIDE to mass his force at Fredericksburgh, this place must be again, for some time to come, the centre of public interest. The first great object to which attention will be directed will, doubtless, be the putting in order of the strip of railroad of thirteen miles from here to Aquia Creek, and the construction of bridges over the Rappahannock across to Fredericksburgh. The track is captured along the whole line; but Gen. BURNSIDE, last August, was compelled to burn the bridges over Potomac and Aquiahock Creeks. The first thing will be to restore these—and with trestle-work, this will be a matter of speedy improvisation. The rolling stock was almost destroyed, and new engines, cars, &c., will have to be brought from Alexandria. But a day or two should see all this done, and put us within three hours of Washington. The two bridges over the Rappahannock were both destroyed some months ago; and of late the only available means of crossing dry-shod between Falmouth and Fredericksburgh has been by a large scow ferry-boat. This was yesterday scuttled and destroyed, on our approach. If there were any object in crossing immediately, however, the present condition of the river presents no very formidable obstacle, as the water nowhere reaches above the knees of infantry, or above the hub of the wheels of supply-trains. If we do not cross this to-morrow, we will soon be doing so by the pontoon, which will doubtless be immediately thrown across the stream. With reference to the railroad from Fredericksburgh to Richmond, I learn that it has, within the past three or four weeks, been put in working order, bridges, &c., restored. One passenger train per day has been running; but all the capacities of the road have been under a constant strain to carry army supplies from the rich Valley of the Rappahannock—one of the great granaries of Virginia. While our artillery practice was going on this afternoon, the train started off for Richmond, and its pace was accelerated by a few of PERRY's admirably directed shots. Three hours afterward it must have entered Richmond, hissing and screaming, to tell the population of the Confederate Capital that the avenging army of the Union is again within striking distance.

The new movement of the army, under the new auspices, onward to Richmond, will doubtless be watched by the public with intense interest and solicitude. It is true the bag of war that is to fly our new leader has yet to come; but everything thus far augurs well for his success. The army has been rapidly and admirably moved. You may perhaps have observed that it took Gen. BURNSIDE precisely one week to get the reins of power into his hands and set the wheels of the grand army a-rolling. On Saturday, the 8th of November, the great work fell upon him. On Saturday, the 15th, we were awakened long before daybreak by the rumbling of artillery through the streets of Warrenton. 'Twas the army in motion southward. Figure to yourselves the enormous mass of details to be mastered by a commander ere he has in his grasp the material elements with which he has to work. Understand that all this has had to be mastered by BURNSIDE since he assumed command—(for he was not in the confidence of Gen. McClellan)—and you will have some conception of the amount of labor that has had to be crowded into that pregnant week! You will doubtless have, before this, received and published the order, constituting the army of the Potomac into three Grand Divisions—the Right Grand Division under Gen. SUMNER; the Centre Grand Division under Gen. HOKER, and the Left Grand Division under Gen. FRANKLIN, with the Reserves under Gen. SIGEL. Can you say that the army is not now on a fighting footing?

When last I wrote you from Warrenton, it was to discuss the demoralized condition of the army, and calculate the number of wagons required to carry off the shoulder straps of indignant officers who would resign all along of the removal of Gen. McCLELLAN. We have forgotten all that, and already it seems like a tale a century old. Scores of the officers who sent in their resignations, (not in Washington, but to their superior officers in the field,) have begged the privilege of recalling them. As for the men, which soldiers march, as we have done the past three days, at the rate of fifteen to twenty miles per day, their hearts are too wearied to allow of very hot polemics as to conflicting claims of Generals. In fact, the subject is dead. "BURNSIDE is our leader now." Under his guidance I report an army confident, high-spirited and steadily pushing on to victory. W. S.

LETTER FROM FAIRFAX COURT-HOUSE.

The Eleventh Army Corps—Change of Position—Boldness of the Rebels—Rumors of an Attack—A Picket Captured—Rebel Officers Taken.

HEADQUARTERS ELEVENTH ARMY CORPS, FAIRFAX COURT-HOUSE, Tuesday, Nov. 18, 1862.

The headquarters of the Eleventh Army Corps were transferred from Gainesville to this place, today. The main portion of the Army of the Potomac having swept down Bull Run Valley, and halted a week at Warrenton, has again taken up its line of march southward, and by this time is well on its way to a field where immediate and more active operations are anticipated. The army, as a whole, was never in better fighting trim than now, and is eager to meet and crush the enemy. The rebel leaders, with their usual cunning, have managed to keep up such a display of troops along the passes leading into the Shenandoah Valley, as to render the detention of a corps at this point, to look after them, a matter of necessity. JACKSON is now, as he ever has been, the great bugbear to those who manage the Union army. It is very generally believed that he has at least 40,000 men, with whom he is ready, at the first convenient opportunity, to pounce upon Washington. To guard against the possibility of such a movement being successful, one of the best disciplined and best generaled corps of the Union army has been held in reserve. So confident were many of the commanders of different posts that the rebels were to make an immediate advance in this direction, that the falling back was not the most orderly. The Eighty-sixth New-York, stationed near New-Baltimore, destroyed about $1,000 worth of provisions. The Twenty-sixth Wisconsin abandoned a large number of tents and muskets. Gen. SIGEL, (we hear of this, unofficially, [illegible] by a sufficient force, [illegible] and, if memory serves, others the same. Much property was also unnecessarily left at Thoroughfare Gap, owing to the order to move being so sudden, that there was not time to order forward sufficient means for transporting everything. The property was subsequently sent for. There seems, also, to have been a slight panic at this place; for one individual burned a number of swords and some other property. The panic, too, must have reached Washington, for by directions from the headquarters of the War Telegraph, the wire was removed between Fairfax Station and this place, and, also, between this place and Centreville; there, unfortunately, most of the poles were cut down. These will all have to be replaced again. The consequence of all this haste or mismanagement is, we are tonight not in telegraphic communication with any point.

No one, who has not been in the front with the army can conceive of the activity and boldness of the rebels, especially when the army or any portion of it is about to fall back, or in any movement abandon a position. If it is a town occupied, armed rebels invariably march into one side, while our rear-guard is leaving at the other; they seem to spring up like ROBERTS DAU's men, on both flanks and rear. Such was the case at Warrenton and all other places recently abandoned. I happened to be at New-Baltimore last night, and had some opportunity of judging of the boldness of the rebels. The place was evacuated this morning. Last night, while all not on guard were preparing for rest, a small rebel force came in and captured one of our pickets, consisting of four men, within two hundred rods of the commanding officer's quarters. At about the same time, another of our pickets captured Major HARRIS and three other rebel officers. Early in the night I found it necessary to cross alone from Catlett's Station to New-Baltimore, and it was with the greatest difficulty that I kept out of the enemy's clutches—having designed in the dark no less than four different parties of armed rebels. The section through which I passed was really within our own lines, though it was not twelve hours later. I mention these little details, that your readers may know some of the difficulties our commanding officers have to encounter in the prosecution of this war. The fact is, our lines are always filled with traitors—it seems next to impossible to prevent it; they profess to be neutral so long as it is necessary to do so, and therefore are generally permitted to remain within the lines. These men know of any contemplated movement of the army quite as soon as officers, and the moment the movement is commenced, they are ready to draw their arms from the places of concealment and fall upon all stragglers—a class of soldiers who are far too numerous in the Union army.

The scouts sent in different directions all return with such information as leads to the belief that an attack in this direction is within the range of possibilities. But scouts are not always infallible, and their information at this time may prove no exception to the rule.

Gen. SIGEL has taken for his headquarters the house occupied by him when here before the move to Gainesville. Col. ROBESON has resumed his arduous duties as Provost-Marshal in the same place as before, and as soon as the telegraph is in order, Fairfax Court-house will again resume its former busy appearance.

AMERICAN AFFAIRS ABROAD.

MORE MEDIATION RUMORS.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says:

"It is rumored that overtures have been or are to be made, by France to the Russian Government, with a view to taking into serious consideration the state of affairs in America; the disastrous effects of the civil war on Europe generally; and whether the time is not now come for the Powers to make a move toward mediation, or recognition of the Confederate States."

The Morning Herald says:

"We are informed that the proposal of France for a joint intervention, to recommend a suspension of hostilities in America, has been laid before the Governments of Russia and England, and has been agreed to by the former."

THE ALABAMA'S DEPREDATIONS.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE LIVERPOOL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

An adjourned meeting of the Council of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce had been held, for the purpose of considering the destruction of shipping by the Confederate steamer Alabama. The Committee on Commercial Law brought up the following resolution for the confirmation of the Council:

"That this Committee recommend the Council to address a letter to Earl RUSSELL, Foreign Secretary, to the following effect: That this Chamber, having had brought before it, the fact of the destruction, in one case, and the seizure and release under ransom bond, in another case, of British property on board Portland vessels, (the Manchester and Tacoma,) by an armed cruiser sailing under a Confederate flag, (as shown by the statements to accompany such letter,) begs to submit the same to the attention of his Lordship, and requesting to be informed what steps Her Majesty's Government contemplates taking to obtain redress for acts which appear to this Chamber to be flagrant violations of the international law, and to prevent their recurrence."

Considerable discussion arose with regard to the expression of any opinion upon the legality of the proceeding of the Alabama, several members urging that as no statement of the fact had been submitted to the Council, they were not in a position to assert that British property was destroyed by Capt. SEMMES.

Mr. S. G. RATHBONE, of the firm of RATHBONE BROTHERS & Co., explained that British property was destroyed, but they had not made any written communication to the Chamber, as they had already written to the Foreign Office on the subject.

Some members of the Chamber expressed their opinion that the Alabama had committed a breach of international law in destroying neutral property on board an enemy's ship, while others contended that as the Confederates had no ports into which to take their prizes, it would be a manifest hardship upon them to prevent their destroying a large amount of the enemy's property because a small amount belonging to neutral parties was on board of the prize.

In the end an amendment was unanimously agreed to, directing a letter to be written to Earl RUSSELL, calling his attention to the destruction of the ships in question and the capture and release of others under ransom bond, by an armed cruiser sailing under the Confederate flag, and desiring to know, for the information of the commercial community, what is the opinion of Her Majesty's Government as to the position of the owners of neutral property.

COMMENTS ON THE ENGLISH PRESS.

From the London Globe.

The work of the Confederate war vessel No. "290," Capt. SEMMES, has now fixed the attention of every merchant in Europe; and all are coming, and have come, to the conclusion "that something must be done." Capt. SEMMES departs from the ordinary usage of maritime warfare. That usage requires that the capturing power shall send the vessel captured, with her cargo, into port, and there submit to the legality, and regularity, of the act of capture to the adjudication of a fit tribunal. Departure from this rule no doubt has before been, and may again, be made. But it plainly requires justification, seeing that by the common consent of nations, compliance with the rule is deemed, for various reasons, desirable. In this instance the justification is apparent. It is necessity. The force of one of the belligerents is such as to deprive the other of the power of effecting a regular condemnation of her prizes. Her power to capture has been hitherto almost extinguished. It now blazes out, but in a form not adapted to accomplish more than temporary mastery over such vessel captured. The Confederate Captain has no port open into which he can send his prizes. So he sinks them.

The necessity of the capturing Power deprives it of the profit of capture, it also deprives neutral Powers of the chance, otherwise considerable, of recovering their goods, when taken afloat under the Federal flag. We say "considerable," because the International law of Europe, as settled in Paris in 1856, exempts from condemnation the goods of a neutral taken under an enemy's flag. And though the Confederate Government, now struggling into existence as one of the family of nations, and already claiming admission into the circle, has not yet signified, nor indeed, has been called upon to signify, its adoption of the rule, thus laid down, we are warranted in hoping, if not in assuming, that, in due time, it will be prepared to adopt and to act upon it, and to give it its due bearing upon acts done by the new Government, even pending the formal admission of its independence. It is but just to admit that the spirit hitherto displayed by the Confederate Government is quite in accordance with this assumption. As some pressure is now being brought to bear upon our own Government by the losers of British property destroyed by Capt. SEMMES, it is not improbable that the views of Ministers touching this new complication of affairs will soon find authoritative expression. Meanwhile, we may observe that we see no ground for the apprehension which seems to be felt in some quarters that any demand upon the Confederate Government, as made, or proposed to be made, will be adverse by the question whether the property destroyed was insured against war risk or not. A risk insured against is simply transferred and distributed. Otherwise, it is unaffected. The party bearing express, for a price, to stand, as we have said above, in the stead of insurance office, his share the risk each is, and with all its apparent rights in the shape of recovery. If the sea swallows goods insured, he may do what he can to reduce the sea to disgorge them; and if their specific gravity, or any other result of the laws of nature, renders them to his possession, he is entitled, so far, to indemnity himself for the loss he has paid under the insurance. So if the sound judgment of a young nation, claiming to be so recognized, and long upon proving, by its first acts, its title to what is manifestly well founded and loyal recognition on the other side of the Atlantic, of the International law so lately agreed on by the European Powers, the result will be the same. Any discussion on the subject would involve distinctions into which no Government can profitably enter; and could not, by possibility, affect the only grounds on which alone a Government could properly either make or grant any such demand for indemnity as is here in view.

THE CASE OF THE STEAMER BLANCHE.

THE SPANISH GOVERNMENT, AND THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE SURROGATE MONTGOMERY.

A Madrid dispatch, of the 5th inst., says:

"It has been decided, in an Extraordinary Council of Ministers, that the Spanish Government shall demand the punishment of the Americans who have violated the Spanish flag. The Queen has given an audience to the American Minister, who expressed the regret that had been felt at what occurred. Her Majesty thinks that the American Government had not authorized the acts of the Captain of the Montgomery."

The Spanish Journals strongly protest against the conduct of the Captain of the Montgomery. Señor CALDERON CONDERAS is said to have sent a note to Washington, demanding satisfaction.

SPIRIT OF THE ENGLISH PRESS.

The Times editorially traces the reverses of the Federal armies in the past to their magnitude, and the consequent difficulty in handling them, and as they promise to be just as unwieldy in the future, it thinks there is nothing to warrant the expectation of more success from the new army which the Federal Government is now preparing.

In another article, the Times quotes from certain New-York journals what it considers evidence of reaction in America, and says:—

"It is plain that a change is coming over the people of the Northern States. Various things combined give us cause to hope that reason and humanity is dawning again in America, after a long obscurity. It is not only that Gen. McCLELLAN's army is unable to take the field, and that the men of whom it is composed are quarrelling, plundering, and deserting in droves; it is a vicious system—but it is one that men dare to speak out and tell us that all this is going on, and that there is little hope of its amendment. Evidently the reaction from the frenzy of the past eighteen months has begun, and we may cherish some hope that the worst is past.

The army, it was thought, was about to go into Winter quarters. The pay of McCLELLAN's army alone is said to be in arrear to the extent of $60,000,000, and many regiments have not received a cent since the first of June."

The New-York correspondent of the Times says the State elections afford unmistakable evidence of the extreme war party being in disfavor, and a strong conservative reaction has set in against Abolitionism, centralization and the arbitrary action of the President and his Cabinet.

The Army and Navy Gazette says it is possible McCLELLAN may be trying to deceive his enemy by giving out that he cannot move and is going into Winter quarters, in order to make a rapid moment and strike them before they are concentrated.

A letter from the Foreign Office informs the Cotton Association of Manchester that if the American ports were opened immediately, the supply could not exceed 2,000,000 bales.

General English News.

A serious and rather threatening riot had taken place at Blackburn, owing to some convictions for poaching under the game laws. Considerable damage was done, and military aid was invoked, but quiet was restored without loss of life or any material bloodshed.

It was reported that Dr. THOMSON, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, was to be the new Archbishop of York.

Some railway arches fell in near London while workmen were engaged in shoring them up, and 17 laborers were buried in the ruins, and, of course, killed.

The Prince of Wales obtained his majority on the Sunday that the Persia left Queenstown. There were to be no formal demonstrations in honor of the event, but a holiday in the leading markets was received upon.

Four Field Marshals were to be created and other minor honors conferred.

The Atlantic Telegraph.

The Nautical Magazine publishes the official report to the Admiralty of the soundings taken in the Atlantic by Her Majesty's ship Porcupine, in June, July and August last, at the instance of the Atlantic Telegraph Company. Among other encouraging statements the report contains the following:

"With reference to the principal object of our inquiry, that of finding a more gradual slope into the bed of the ocean, I consider that our soundings, shown in the accompanying chart, clearly prove that the general dip of the bank presents no difficulty whatever to laying a cable either from Valentia or Loop Head, or any other part of the west coast of Ireland, between Bantry and Blacksod Bays, that may offer facilities for securely landing and working it."

The report concludes as follows:

"On examining the soundings the slope will be found to vary from six to nineteen feet dip in one hundred feet horizontal, a dip that cannot possibly strain or injure the cable. The knowledge of this fact will, I trust, remove one of the supposed difficulties in the way of laying it, and help to forward the successful realization of this great National undertaking."

The Editor of the Nautical Magazine—Capt. BENCHAM, of the Hydrographic Department of the Admiralty—thus comments upon the report:

"The foregoing report sets at rest the imaginary difficulties of the precipitous character of the approaches from the sea-bed to the western coast of Ireland, Mr. HENMAN having found several depths (to which we have affixed an asterisk in his tabulated statement) where the deep has been found by him in some as little as one in six—that of an ordinary shingle beach. A few more soundings to the southward would have been acceptable, but sufficient are obtained on a direct line to show that a cable may be laid there so as to gain the deep bed of the Atlantic by an easy descent. This would be better shown on a large scale, but we have sketched out this section on our chart as conveying an idea of the slope in that latitude, and probably sufficient data will be found in the reports for others hereafter. The whole operations of the voyage are highly creditable to Mr. HENMAN, and his report, so far as it goes, quite satisfactory in regard to a line for a cable."

Mr. CYRUS W. FIELD was devoting his untiring energy to the prosecution of the enterprise. He was paying flying visits to the great commercial centres, Manchester, Liverpool, Glasgow, Dublin, &c., and conferring with the leading men of those places in regard to the development of the important work. At Manchester, Mr. FIELD was among the guests assembled at the residence of Mr. JOHN PENDER to meet Mr. CRAMPTON. At this meeting the renewed effort to establish telegraphic communication with America was freely discussed. Mr. CRAMPTON enlarged upon the benefits that must accrue from the accomplishment of so grand a work, and promised it a hearty support. Mr. BAILEY, member of Parliament for Manchester, also spoke of the project in a very encouraging strain. Mr. FIELD spoke in favor of the general practicability of the undertaking, and agreed that its success would have a great tendency to promote a better state of feeling between England and America.

France.

The Bank of France, on the 6th inst., raised its minimum rate of discount to 4 ⅌ cent.

Count DE PARIEU, in a circular announcing the appointment of M. DRUYN DE L'HUYS, states that this modification of the Cabinet by no means changes the policy of the Imperial Government. The new Minister of Foreign Affairs, it is added, may effectually serve the solution of that great and difficult question relating to Rome, as he is unfettered by previous negotiations. The Imperial Government will neither sacrifice the Pope to Italy, nor Italy to the Pope.

LATER FROM MEXICO.

Opening of the Congressional Session.

Extracts from the President's Message.

Letter from Miramon to Almonte.

From Our Havana Correspondent.

HAVANA, Saturday, Nov. 15, 1862.

The Heraldo of Mexico, gives the following resume of the opening of the Mexican Congress:

"The Congress opened its session with due solemnity on the 20th ult., the President assisting, accompanied by his ministers, the city corporation, other municipalities, and the generals and chiefs not on duty. The diplomatic corps occupied the tribune reserved for them. The galleries and approaches to the chamber were filled with people. The message of President JUAREZ was read. He expresses in it the great pleasure he experienced in seeing himself in the midst of the Representatives, which constitutes day he had wished for. "The haughty enemy," he says, "who flattered themselves that they would destroy our beautiful institutions by the sound of their arms alone, have come to witness the imposing spectacle of a people jealous of their nationality and their liberties, sending its valiant legions to the theatre of war, and electing its Representatives with perfect regularity."

Further on he continues:

"The spirit that reigns among all our troops is excellent; the four years' revolution, and the encounter with the foreign enemy, have made valor as general in our army that praise can scarcely be dispensed, as its more prominent exhibition; discipline has proportionately improved, the self-abnegation of our soldiers is, as ever, incomparable, and a reciprocal confidence exists between the soldiers and their leaders. Joining to these considerations the distance separating us from the French Empire, and the dangers that threaten to disturb the peace of Europe, we shall comprehend that our situation, serious as it is, presents very good probability of an advantageous result for the Republic."

After commenting upon the object of the war, now known to all the world, the message continues:

"To proclaim, as our enemies do, that they do not make war against the country, but against its actual Government, is to repeat the vain declaration of all who enter upon an offensive and aggressive war, whilst it is very evident that a nation is entirely when the power which they have raised up and what to maintain is attacked. The appeal to the vote of the country proposed by our enemies, is only a sarcasm unworthy to be taken into consideration for a moment. In fine, the determination not to treat with the legal Government, de jure et facto, is a declaration of war against the rights of nations, because it closes up all the avenues to suitable satisfaction.

If I were simply a private individual, or if the power that I wield were gained through some disgraceful revolt, as sometimes happened before the nation organized its legitimate Government, I would not hesitate to sacrifice my position, if by this means the scourge of war could be driven from my country. As the authority is not an inheritance, but a trust that the nation has confided to me, more especially to maintain its independence and honor, I have received and preserved this trust for the time that our fundamental law prescribes, and I will never put it at the disposition of a foreign enemy on the contrary I will maintain against that enemy the war which the whole nation has taken up, until he is obliged to acknowledge the justice of our cause. But evidently the Government could not fulfill the arduous duties which this extraordinary situation imposes upon it, without the discretionary power, which, up to the present time, it exercises by will of the Congress."

JOSE GONZALES ECHEVERRIA, President of the Chamber, replied to the First Magistrate of the Republic in a speech, full of patriotism, in which, among other things, he says:

"The national representation comprehends that the financial condition of the Republic will occasion difficulties to the Government in organizing the defence upon which the country is resolved, but this very resolution neutralizes to a great extent the obstacles, because it predisposes the nation to every kind of sacrifice. Those which the emergencies of the war may require do not frighten the people; all they ask of the Government is to save their independence and liberty. We protest in their name, as the nation is now doing by actions, that the persons and property of all Mexicans are at this moment but the country's. The proofs of patriotic self-denial which are taking place, almost all the Republic, authorise the Congress to speak in these terms, without its words being taken as a useless echo of historical resolutions."

The following is a translation of a letter written by MIRAMON, Ex-President of the Mexican Republic, to ALMONTE, a copy of which was transmitted to the Diario, of Havana, by the writer:

NEW-YORK, Nov. 5.

DEAR SIR: In the Diario de la Marina, of Havana, of the 11th of last month, I read the circular dated Sept. 19, which stated that you had appointed Col. JOSE H. GONZALES as Under Secretary of State of the Government in Orizaba.

I am sorry that my name should have been mentioned in that publication without any necessity, and without taking into account the fact that recently I have earnestly tried to keep the public from occupying themselves about me. Especially do I regret it as this occurs at a period in which all of us Mexicans ought to labor for a strict union in order to operate in concert for our country in the present momentous crisis.

I would have remained silent at this time, as at others, when I have been attacked by fanatical writers of the demagogue party of my country, or by badly informed writers in foreign journals, awaiting the period when I might be listened to and calmly judged by my fellow-citizens; but Col. GONZALES, in the above-stated circular, spoke as your organ, you were a Minister Plenipotentiary of the Republic, representing the Government at the head of which I had the honor to be, and the passages of the circular that concern me refer to a matter in which you had to intervene officially. They have on that account some importance, and must have caused an impression that would render my silence, even for a short time, culpable to misconstruction. Therefore, in sending you this letter, you must not be astonished at my sending it to some papers in which Col. GONZALES's note has been published.

No doubt you are mistaken or Señor GONZALES is mistaken in asserting that I, having taken the place of Gen. ZULOAGA in 1858, in the Republic, asked of the Imperial Government the armed intervention of France to maintain the Government, and I flatter myself, from my knowledge of your desire of justice, that you will rectify this statement, and that you will have the kindness to publish the documents relating to it. You can have no difficulty in so doing, supposing you had known that the affair itself should be thus arranged and that the documents must be in your reach. If they had remained in the archives of the Legation, they would have already appeared in a thousand pamphlets, so that there might fall upon me the severe which the demagogues affect to believe due to Mexicans who entertain sentiments favorable to foreign intervention, and with more reason to those who have brought it about.

You are likewise mistaken, or Señor GONZALES is, in supposing that I pretended to be maintained in the Supreme Magistracy of the Republic by French bayonets. Whenever the slightest opportunity offered itself of putting an end to the civil war during my administration, whenever any scheme was settled upon for a similar purpose, the first basis that I fixed upon was my withdrawal from the Presidency, and the choice of a ruler by the nation itself; I refer, among other things, to the propositions for an arrangement which I offered, when Capt. ALDRAM, in the name of the English Government, offered his friendly mediation between the contending parties. I find, General, more glory in assisting with my sword for the support of a Government that presides for the elevation of my country, than in being Chief of the State; the former is more suited to my inclinations; my career has been in the field, and not in the Cabinet.

I know not to what facts the circular alludes as a proof of my ambition, but I am astonished that my conduct is quoted as a proof. My conduct, until we took leave of each other in Paris, in the greatest harmony the last time we were together, deserved your entire approbation, and was in accordance with the conversations that we held almost every day. You must remember it well. After the act committed against my person by the English nation in the waters of Vera Cruz, it has been such as true patriotism and respect to myself demanded; I have kept myself away from the theatre of events, so that my presence might not seem embarrassing to the persons who might bring about the beneficence of my country, and to prevent them from feeling the slightest apprehension, I resolved to remain thus in retirement until those same persons might point out to me the occasion for me to offer my services.

It has been truly painful to me to have to trouble you with this long letter, but you see that I have not exceeded the limits of what is required for the defence of my honor, and the statement of facts which I sought to keep from being perverted. With this same design I shall continue to labor for the future. In the meantime, I am yours, truly,

MIGUEL MIRAMON.

Life Scenes in Camp.

BOLIVAR HEIGHTS, Thursday, Nov. 13, 1862.

DEAR BROTHER: I suppose you read my letter to mother, describing an excursion along the mountains up the Shenandoah Valley. While we were there we sent out two companies at a time every day on picket at fords on the Shenandoah River, which at this place was about as wide as Grandpa's Mill Pond, but not so deep. The first company captured a rebel lieutenant and a private belonging to the secesh cavalry. They came down to the other side of the river, tied their horses, rowed across, and went into a farm house a little back to eat breakfast. Finding they were observed by our men they went to run, but the leveling of our rifles halted them. Of course we wanted to take their horses, too, but were afraid of some rebel cavalry, to be seen at a short distance. Some of them came down to cover the retreat of their scouts, (not knowing that we had captured them,) but we shot one of them and wounded another, and compelled them to retire, when two of our men returned across, and secured the horses, safely bringing them back. One of the horses is a very good, white stallion, how better employed in carrying our gallant Major. He can outrun, outtrot and out maneuver any other horse around.

Company A went out Thursday morning and stationed pickets at two fords—15 men and 1 sergeant at one, and 15 men and 2 sergeants at the other. I was the sergeant with the former squad. The captain and lieutenant were with the other. I thought one of them ought to have staid with me, but I suppose they wanted to be together. My position was at a bend of the river, near a saw-mill. You could very easily speak across the river, and by swimming some fifteen feet, you could walk the rest. About 300 yards back was a rebel picket, and a little farther numerous rebel cavalry. We dug a hole in the ground about eight feet square and four deep, in which to make our little fire, so that at night the light might not guide a rebel bullet during the day they would keep out of bullet range. One of my men stole a pig with his sabre-bayonet, as it ran near his post, so we had plenty of fresh pork and pork-steak all the time we were there. We expected to be relieved Friday morning, as we should have been, but after a long, cold, sleepless night, the morning brought us only a snow-storm! Noon came and no relief arrived; so we had to continue on duty for twenty-four hours more in the snow and cold, our rifles wet, our feet almost frozen, etc. All this was bad enough, but then our coffee and meat gave out, and our stomachs began to chill, too; and to cap the climax, our Major came riding up rapidly, all muffled up in Napoleonic style, and, addressing me, said: "Sergeant, you must put that fire out; we have reliable information that the rebels desire to decoy us to-night, and we all depend on you, to alarm the camp if they do." All this made me feel as if we were pretty hardly used. However, as it was about an hour before dark, I ordered the corporal to keep up the fire till then, and put the kettle over, while I hurried over to camp and tried to get little coffee to warm us up. Taking one man as a body guard, we double-quicked it to camp, got the coffee, and, moreover, an 8-pound chunk of fresh beef, and a loaf for each of fresh bread, which had just arrived in camp, and which the Quartermaster kindly gave me without stopping to weigh it. Thus heavily laden, we went back over the snow on a dog-trot, accomplishing the whole inside of an hour. We had coffee that night for supper! You may well suppose that by this time, after thirty-six hours' continuous vigilance, I began to feel sleepy. However, I could not yet "court weary nature's sweet restorer." I sent the corporal to bed, to sleep till 12 o'clock, when I would awake him. His bed was some wet cornstalks under a few rails leaning against the fence. It was now 8 o'clock, and if ever I knew six tardy, weary hours, I experienced them then! When I posted my sentries I placed them in ambush behind trees and bushes, so that the enemy might not see them. About 10 o'clock I made a tour of observation along the line of the river shore, trying to see a "secesh" on the other side, but without success. You should have seen me then!—my rubber blanket round my shoulders, my rubber havelock on my head and neck, my rifle under my arm, I peering through the dark as I moved stealthily along, the snow blinding my eyes. Once I fancied I heard the click of a musket across the river, which suggested the possibility of a gun being leveled upon me by some rebel sharpshooter. I cocked my piece and anxiously listened and waited for other developments, which however were simply my return to my headquarters.

At 12 I woke up the corporal and told him I must try and get a little sleep and tried to impress him with his responsibility, but I did not venture to go to his orib lest I should sleep too soundly. So, putting my rubber blanket on the ground, or rather on the snow, I threw myself on the one-half of it pulling the other half over me, my rifle for pillow under my head, and the flap of my havelock over my face, and having intrusted myself, my friends and my country to Him who never sleeps, I got a refreshing nap of four hours unbroken by the least disturbance. Nothing of import happened all night. At early dawn we lighted up the fire, cooked our meat, making some excellent soup with some cabbage that one of the boys got—somewhere.

At 3 o'clock next afternoon we were called in without having been relieved, as the whole regiment was about to return to Bolivar Heights. So I conducted my command back to camp, and then filling our haversacks we fell in with the rest of the regiment for a march of 31 miles back to this place, where I fear we are to have winter quarters.

Your affectionate brother,

P. W. L.

OBITUARY.

FREDERICK LISSE, whose sudden demise has cast a gloom over an extensive circle in this City and country, and in the commercial community at large, deserves more than a passing notice from one who was on the most intimate terms with him for an unbroken term of 33 years, and who will revere and cherish his memory for the many virtuous qualities by him practiced while living. He was a good man in every sense of the word, and should be an example to all his survivors.

Mr. LISSE was born in Birckeburgh, Germany, about 1797, and was apprenticed to the trade of a cutler and turner. In his 17th year he was compelled by conscription to carry the arms of a soldier, for which he recived a Prussian war medal in 1815. He arrived here quite young, and was engaged by the New-York Gaslight Company, at a high salary. In a short time afterward his genius prompted him to erect a factory which has since been of the greatest benefit to the suffering community, and from which he has, for the past 40 years, supplied nearly all the hospitals, druggists, and medical faculty. His surgical instruments challenge competition, in regard to usefulness, with those of English and French manufacture. The extensive business relations of Mr. LISSE brought him in contact with almost all classes of society, and through his affability and agreeable manners won for him from all the greatest confidence. His benevolence and liberality were unbounded. Since the war broke out he has liberally contributed to raising of regiments, and has a son-in-law now serving as a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Army.

The urbanity of Mr. LISSE was unbounded and was made conspicuously manifest during his term of office as President of the German Benevolent Society of this City. He was also connected and a contributor to many other charitable societies, among which may be classed the I. O. O. F. and Masonic fraternity. In 1836 he was Grand Master of the I. O. O. F. of the State of New-York and W. M. of F. A. Lodge No. 2 of Masons. His funeral took place on Monday, and although the weather was very inclement it was very numerously attended.

CIRCULAR FROM SUPERINTENDENT VAN DYCK.

District-Attorney SHAFER, of Albany, acknowledges the receipt of the following document, which has doubtless been sent to officials in other districts, and declares his purpose of enforcing the penalties:

STATE OF NEW-YORK, BANK DEPARTMENT, ALBANY, Nov. 14, 1862.

Ira Shafer, Esq., District-Attorney:

The numerous and constantly increasing violations of the law against "unauthorized Banking," which exist in our midst, would seem to call for the intervention of the public authorities.

The action of the Corporation of this City, in authorizing the issue of notes in its name, representing fractional parts of a dollar, found an apology in the inconvenience resulting from the withdrawal of silver coin from circulation. Being the act of a Municipal body, it held out an assurance against ultimate loss through a failure to redeem the currency issued.

But this example is now being followed by private individuals, and each day adds to the number of those who are violating the law, and increasing the hazards of the community by issuing notes to circulate as money, without the security prescribed by law for their ultimate redemption.

Under these circumstances, I am but fulfilling a public duty in calling upon you to enforce the penalties prescribed against those who shall continue, after due notice, to make the interests of the public subordinate to private cupidity.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. H. VAN DYCK, Superintendent.

—The authorities at the India Office have decided upon taking immediate steps for completing the land line of telegraph now in existence as far as Bagdad on to the head of the Persian Gulf, and to lay a submarine cable thence to Gwadel, on the coast of Beloochistan, from which point a land line is being [illegible] to join the Indian system of telegraphs at Kurrachee. LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE CASE OF MRS. BRINSMADE.

Trial of Superintendent Kennedy Before the Police Commissioners.

Testimony of S. L. M. Barlow, Mrs. Brinsmade, Dr. Phelps, Mrs. Elliott, Inspector Leonard, and Charles Reynolds.

Something About Marshal Baker's "Affection"—Mr. Kennedy's "Two Hammers"—Mrs. Brinsmade's Opinion of Stonewall Jackson—What the Secretary of War Thought of her Letters and Portraits.

Yesterday morning was set apart by the Police Commissioners for the trial of Police-Superintendent Kennedy on the charge of the alleged imprisonment of Mrs. Brinsmade, of New-Orleans. There was a large attendance of witnesses, Police Captains and interested spectators. Among the latter were District-Attorney A. O. Hall and Dr. Mahan—the latter gentleman well known for his connection with the Beardsley Divorce case. The Police Commission was represented in the persons of Messrs. Bowen, Acton and Bergen. Mr. S. L. M. Barlow appeared to aid in the investigation on the part of the complainant, and Mr. Kennedy was present with his counsel, ex-Judge Gilbert Dean. The small and crumped room was quite crowded with the necessary persons present, no small proportion of whom were representatives of the Press.

Mr. Bowen, previous to the calling of witnesses, read over the statement of the case made by Mr. Barlow, and published in the newspapers, which statement, and correspondence annexed, form the specifications of the charges against Mr. Kennedy. Mr. Bowen said he supposed the first point in the complaint was the following: "Application was made to Mr. Kennedy, after her arrest, for permission to see her, which was rudely refused by Kennedy;" "that application was made to Kennedy for the cause of her arrest, and for permission to see her, which was rudely refused by Mr. Kennedy." Mr. Bowen asked Mr. Barlow whether there was anything previous to that he took exception to?

Mr. Barlow said he took exception to the arrest itself. He did not understand that Mr. Kennedy had the authority from anybody to make this arrest. He believed it would be proper to first examine Mrs. Brinsmade, in reference to the fact of her arrival, visit to Washington, arrest and detention.

Mr. Bowen thought that the points to which he called attention were the first that appeared on the face of the correspondence, and that the allegation that Mr. Kennedy "threatened to lock up the applicant for making the application," formed a portion of the first specification. Mr. Bowen then explained to Mr. Dean, that he was trying to separate and designate the distinct charges in the specifications.

Mr. Dean said he knew nothing about this case except what had appeared in the newspapers, until Mr. Kennedy called at his house last evening, and desired that he should appear as his counsel. He would also say that they desired that the examination should be thorough and public. Of course it would be more convenient for the public if definite specifications were made out.

Mr. Bowen said he understood Mr. Barlow to consent that the documents alluded to should be the specifications of the charge.

Mr. Barlow replied that he could not consent, as he was not prosecuting. Nor did he propose to appear as counsel for Mrs. Brinsmade, or for the people. He promised simply to give the Commission the benefit of any information in his possession.

Mr. Bowen said the first information the Commissioners of the arrest of Mrs. Brinsmade was from the statement made in Mr. Barlow's letter. The charge had been made against Mr. Kennedy, that Mr. Barlow did not appear as prosecutor, he nevertheless the complainant, in behalf of the public, in behalf of his friend or client. As such the Commissioners welcomed him, and accepted his aid in getting at the truth. They would endeavor to have the investigation thorough and complete, and the specifications thoroughly sifted.

Mr. Barlow said he did not appear in the attitude of a prosecutor of Mr. Kennedy. He had become aware of certain facts, as stated in his letter, and had deemed it his duty, as a sworn Attorney at the Bar of New-York, to make these facts known. If he had been misinformed—if the facts were not as stated—he would have done his duty, and the misstatement would be corrected. He was here as a witness, to give the Commission the benefit of his evidence.

Mr. Dean admitted that Mr. Barlow's efforts in the case were but consistent with his duty as a member of the Bar.

Mr. Bowen then proposed to swear Mr. Barlow, who said, "Do you wish to swear me? I do not believe I can give you any evidence." Mr. Bowen, however, thought it would be best for Mr. Barlow to tell all he knew about the statement contained in his letter to the Press. So Mr. Barlow was sworn, and testified as follows:

TESTIMONY OF S. L. M. BARLOW, ESQ.

About the 2d of October, a gentleman at the Union Club, in this City, informed me that Mrs. Brinsmade had been in confinement three or four weeks at a station-house in the City of New-York, by the alleged order of Mr. Kennedy, and that there was difficulty in obtaining information as to the charges on which she was arrested; the gentleman said it was strange that there were not among the thousands of lawyers in New-York, any who would get out a writ of habeas corpus, and, according to my idea, woman was held; I stated that I would take out the writ upon the necessary facts being presented; I undertook to get the facts, but, Mr. Draper, coming in, I asked him if he knew the facts; he said he did not; I explained them to him, and he said he would inquire in Washington, and that if the facts were as represented, that the woman should be discharged; on the Monday preceding the election, Mr. Draper said he had obtained information sufficient to warrant him in ordering the discharge of Mrs. Brinsmade.

Mr. Kennedy—Did he had ordered it?

Mr. Barlow—No; information on which he had procured her discharge. All the facts alleged in the published letters were obtained from parties who are here now as witnesses.

Mr. Dean—You have no personal knowledge of any of these facts—none of the important facts in the charges against Mr. Kennedy? A.—No.

TESTIMONY OF DR. CHARLES PHELPS.

Dr. Charles Phelps, a sandy-whiskered gentleman with a gold-headed cane, was the next witness called. He testified as follows: I live at No. 6 Lexington-avenue; I knew Mrs. Brinsmade in New-Orleans; she came passenger with us on the Fulton, from New-Orleans, late in August last; I went with her to the Everett House the same day we arrived; remained a week; she remained, too; I then went to Alexandria, Va.; I was arrested in Washington by a man whom they called Bowles; no charge was made against me; I was taken before Col. Baker, Provost-Marshal of the War Department at Washington; was detained from Wednesday until Saturday at the Old Capitol Prison; they made no charges against me; it was intimated that I was a disloyal person and not a Federate citizen; I heard of the arrest of Mrs. Brinsmade after that arrest on Thursday evening; Mr. Woods, the keeper of the prison, told me; I saw Mrs. Brinsmade in Washington; I came away an hour after I was released; I knew of Mrs. Brinsmade being in New-York; I arrived here on Saturday evening about 9 o'clock; went to the St. Nicholas and another hotel, but could not find her; I was told by one of the deputies of the Provost-Marshal's Office in Washington, that I could see Mrs. Brinsmade at the St. Nicholas immediately after she got here; after finding that she was not there or at the other hotels, I took the proper course by inquiring of Mr. Kennedy, who was at that time Provost-Marshal of the City of New-York; I saw him on Sunday morning the day after my return, at his house early in the morning; I introduced myself to him and told him, I do not recollect the exact words, but the substance of it was, "I have been told that Mrs. Brinsmade was in New-York, and I had come to him as the proper person to inquire of;" he said he had no information as to her place of confinement; that he had knowledge of the case as of other similar cases, but that he was [illegible] interested in this one; he [illegible] that if I would call here at eleven o'clock [illegible] would give me an answer; I called, [illegible] he received a letter from Baker, who told him that if he had the slightest idea that I knew Mrs. Brinsmade was to be sent to New-Orleans he would have kept me in Washington longer than he did; I asked if I could communicate with her; he told me No; I told him that I should like to do so through him or other parties just as well as any other way; he told me that I had better not interfere in the case any further; I disclaimed any interference at all; he then told me that if I did—I do not recollect his exact words—but the substance was that if I did attempt to find out the place of confinement of Mrs. Brinsmade, I should be locked up and kept.

Q.—Was there any complaint against your manner—any thing you said to provoke such a threat? Any objection to your manner or language? A.—No, sir.

Q.—What was Mrs. Brinsmade's conduct and manner on the passage from New-Orleans? A.—The only thing I noticed that distinguished her conduct from the other ladies, was the fact that she was kind and attentive to the sick and disabled United States soldiers coming on from New-Orleans; she said that, and we had thirty or forty lady passengers; I do not know that there was any other lady who did anything of that kind; I can volunteer a statement; I have noticed a change since the last opportunity of denouncing the Government, although I know her better than anybody else except the Midshipman alluded to, I have never heard her use a disloyal expression; have heard her speak in disparaging terms of Burke, in a personal way.

To Mr. Dean—I was not in the United States service; was in the employ of the New-York and Havana Steamship Company; I became acquainted with Mrs. Brinsmade at New-Orleans; it was in the Summer; she came on board the Fulton; never met her at any house in New-Orleans; I have no personal knowledge about her husband, except what I was told; I was told she had a husband; have been told that he was in the Confederate service in the army; she called on board the ship once or twice after the first time; I have resided in New-York at various times when the ship has been in port—in Fourteenth-street, the Everett House and in Lexington-avenue; I remained at the Everett House during the time Mrs. Brinsmade was in the City; Mr. E. T. Woodward, the midshipman spoken of, who has been promoted since, was there all the time; he left the day before I did; I left on Friday, Sept. 19; I went on the Fulton to Alexandria; Mrs. Brinsmade, or some friend of hers, did send me a telegraph dispatch that I received in Hampton Roads, or at Fort Monroe; I do not think I have the dispatch; she did not telegraph more than once; the purport was that she was in Washington, and would be glad to see me; I did go to Washington; I had no special business with her.

At this point a discussion arose between Mr. Barlow, Mr. Dean, Mr. Phelps and Mr. Bergen, as to the object of the line of inquiry. Mr. Dean said it was to show the character of the relations between the Doctor and Mrs. Brinsmade—that they were intimate, and he was very friendly to her—that his feelings were very strongly interested in her.

Mr. Barlow—We admit it.

Mr. Phelps said that in view of insinuations which had appeared in the public prints, he desired to make a statement, and that was that his relations with Mrs. Brinsmade had been entirely of an honorable character. Insinuations to the contrary had appeared in the public prints, and he declared them to be entirely and utterly false.

Mr. Bowen—Whatever her character may be morally, we have nothing to do with. She is not upon trial.

Dr. Phelps to Mr. Bowen—I believed from the character of the examination that she was.

Dr. Phelps to Mr. Dean—I understood I was released by order of the War Department; I did not hear Mr. Kennedy's name used in connection with my arrest; I was confined in the old Capitol Prison; before being taken there, I was carried to the office of Baker, or I went voluntarily, being told that he wished to see me, and was there arrested; the office is directly opposite Willard's; I did have a difficulty with Col. Baker—hard words; he insulted me, and I pocketed the insult, of course; my testimony on the way to New-York; I came on the cars; I arrived about twelve o'clock Saturday night; visited the St. Nicholas and Metropolitan in search of Mrs. Brinsmade; called upon Mr. Kennedy at eight A. M. Sunday, and again at eleven A. M.; it was at the last interview Mr. Kennedy spoke of receiving the letter from Col. Baker; he did not mention it when I saw him at eight o'clock.

Q.—Did he not in that conversation say that Mrs. Brinsmade was held by order of Baker? A.—I do not recollect of any such statement being made, one way or the other.

Q.—Did he not give that as a reason for his reply about the letter of Col. Baker? A.—I do not know that he gave it to me explicitly. At the house he said he had no information of her whereabouts; when he alluded to the letter of Baker, he did not show the letter.

Q.—Where did you see Mrs. Brinsmade in Washington? A.—At the Old Capitol Prison; she told me she was under arrest, and was going to New-York, and was to be sent to New-Orleans; there was an officer with her.

To Mr. Bowen—The interview at Mr. Kennedy's house lasted ten or fifteen minutes; the interview the last time lasted about five minutes.

Q.—(By Mr. Barlow)—Was that a threatening tone that Mr. Kennedy used, a pleasant one, or a suggestive one on the part of Mr. Kennedy? A.—His manner was unpleasant; I did not regard it as suggestive, but rather as a command.

Mr. Bowen—I do not understand from the testimony that his manner was such as you could take offence at from a public officer who was overwhelmed with business.

Mr. Phelps—I regarded it as offensive, Sir.

Q.—In what respect? A.—The words.

Q.—What were the words? A.—First the words of Baker's letter, and second, the statement that I had best not interfere any further, and that if I did I should be locked up in a cell and kept.

This closed the testimony of Dr. Phelps, and there was a visible stir as the name of Mrs. Elliott was called. The lady was tastefully attired in black silk. She had a blue veil thrown over her face, which, at [illegible] was given over, [illegible] indeed, so rapidly that the excellent short-hand reporters employed by the Police Commissioners found it always difficult and often impossible to catch her utterances. She testified as follows:

TESTIMONY OF MRS. BRINSMADE.

My name is Isabel M. Brinsmade; I reside in New-Orleans; I was born there; I left there about the 25th of August last, on the steamer Fulton; I was coming to New-York for the purpose of transacting private family business; I intended to remain a short time in New-York; after I got here, I made up my mind to go to Washington; on the passage here, I knew the Captain, his wife and son, Dr. Phelps, and some of the lady passengers; we arrived at New-York on the 25th of Sept.; I went to the Everett House; afterward went to Brooklyn; was there a week; I resided there with a friend—an old connection; I then went to Washington; was there four days; was arrested by one Bowles, an officer, who told me it was by order of the Provost-Marshal of Washington City, Col. Baker, before whom I was taken; they took from me my private papers, my pictures—portraits of myself; Baker told me I was arrested by order of the Secretary of War; that I was accused of being a rebel spy, of having treasonable papers in my possession; he told me they would send me to New-Orleans; I told him I had not done anything to deserve that; he said I had been indiscreet in remarks about the Government; that I had said that Stonewall Jackson was the only man who could fight McClellan, (laughter,) which of course I acknowledged, (great laughter:) he told me that I was going to be sent to New-Orleans; that I was to be taken to New-York, and kept a prisoner at the St. Nicholas Hotel until I was sent away; that on Saturday he was going to New-York, and would release me. He said there was nothing in my private papers to hold me as a spy; he said my letters were very affectionate; he said my pictures were, one or two of them, good-looking, and he proposed to preserve and keep them because they were good-looking; he informed me that he could not return my pictures and letters until the next day, because he wished to show them to the Secretary of War before he gave them to me. When I came to New-York, Bowles brought me to the headquarters, in Broome-street, in a carriage.

Q.—What was Bowles' conduct and manner toward you? A.—He was exceedingly affectionate, and called me my dear Bella; when he got out of the carriage he did not tell me the place it was, saying he stopped for orders; when he came back he told me I was to be taken to the Forty-seventh-street station-house; the driver got down from his seat on the carriage, and I saw a gentleman whom I knew; I told the driver to tell that gentleman where he took me; I never saw Mr. Kennedy; I should not know him if I should see him; during my confinement in the Station-house I saw the Captain, and Sergeants, and Policemen every day; Col. Baker came after I had been there three weeks; he said that he had come to release me; that the Secretary of War and Kennedy were anxious to have me sent to New-Orleans; that Kennedy had written to him, urging my release, fearing time to time, and that he had persuaded him (Kennedy) by telling him for Deguise, when certain vessels were going to New-Orleans; that Kennedy had been very anxious to have me sent to New-Orleans, and that he (Baker) had persuaded the Secretary of War not to do it; that Mr. Kennedy had been repeatedly requesting the order to send me to New-Orleans; that he had told him to see about other ships leaving for New-Orleans; that it was to employ and please Kennedy; that Kennedy asked him, when he arrived in New-York, whether he had an order for my removal South; that he had told Kennedy "No," that he had brought a release; that Kennedy said, "I will serve it—I would prefer doing it myself;" Baker told me I would be released next day, at 8 or 12 o'clock; he was going to Albany and would return in the morning; that I should not go away with anyone else but him; that if I let Kennedy know where I went Kennedy would arrest me again; he advised me to leave New-York for a few days, because, if Kennedy knew where I was going, he would arrest me; I asked Bowles what was to become of me; he said he did not know; he had not read his orders from the War Department; I frequently asked the officers when they went down to headquarters in the morning, to ask Mr. Kennedy if he had any orders about me; the invariable reply was that "Kennedy can't do anything for you until he receives orders from the War Department." Baker promised to let me out, he said I had [illegible] Kennedy in New-York; I told Baker I would go with him; he said he would be [illegible] him; I told Baker I would go with him; that if I would go with him I should be discharged, because then he would take me where neither Kennedy or anybody else would patrol me again. I frequently complained to Mr. Kennedy by Capt. Slocum and others; I had not committed any of my offence; I did not meddle with political affairs; I wanted to come North, and my business had no connection with any political or military subject; I had a pass from the military commander of New-Orleans to come here. I had letters to Messrs. Elliott, Searing, and others, authorizing them to advance me money to defray my expenses—whatever I wanted.

To Mr. Dean—I never saw Mr. Kennedy; was very so far as I know, he had nothing to do with my arrest; I always supposed that Mr. Kennedy was not my custodian—or that the officers who had charge of me, and without whom Kennedy could do nothing, were at the War Department; that was the invariable reply to my inquiries. But do I told me I was a prisoner by order of the Secretary of War.

To Mr. Bowen—I was treated with the utmost respect by all the officers and policemen at the Station-house; I was treated very politely by Bowles and Baker; I have no complaint to make as far as the Station-house is concerned.

To Mr. Dean—I was kept in a little room, next to the large room where complaints are all entered in the books; I had a separate room by myself; I was taken to the adjoining house for my meals, and was comfortable; the room was cold, but one of the officers lent me a rug; my privacy was not invaded; they all treated me with respect; they all thought my imprisonment an outrage.

Q.—They did not put you in a cell?

Mrs. Brinsmade (earnestly)—Oh, they would not dare to do that (laughter:) I was allowed no connection with the outside world; they refused to let me send letters, even under their supervision, but I managed to pitch one out of the window, which some kind person put in the Post-office, and it reached its destination; the officers said they had no authority to permit me to write; Baker told me that Draper could not get me out; that Draper was a man of no influence or power, and could not get me out; I had no means of communicating with friends or counsel during the forty days of my imprisonment in the Station-house.

Some portions of Mrs. Brinsmade's testimony was repeated, in order to secure accuracy in the official reporter's notes. The above is the substance of all her testimony, and, in nearly every instance, is exactly her own language.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. J. K. ELLIOTT.

Mrs. J. K. Elliott was the next witness; she testified as follows: I have known Mrs. Brinsmade since she was a child; knew her in New-Orleans; have known her from childhood; was a neighbor of her father's; when I heard that Mrs. Brinsmade was a prisoner, I called upon Mr. Kennedy in company with Mrs. Converse, who had also known Mrs. Brinsmade; I asked where she was confined; by whose order, and for what reason; Mr. Kennedy said she was arrested as a general spy; that he had watched her since her landing in New-York; that his purpose was overwhelmed; but since she arrived here; that when she was in Brooklyn he had been there; that when she was at the Everett House he was there; that when she went to Washington his presence followed her there, and that when he got her in the right place where he could prevent her doing mischief, he had arrested her; I asked who was her accuser; who had arrested her; what had she done? he said he was her accuser; "I, madam, am her accuser;" these were the very words he used.

Q.—Did you ask permission to see Mrs. Brinsmade? A.—I did; he said I could not see her; he did not tell me where she was; I told him I had been there and tried to see her; I went there first expecting I could see her without trouble.

Q.—Did you explain to the Superintendent that you were interested in her—that you had known her before? A.—Yes, Sir; I said I had known her from childhood; I do not remember whether I told him all; I was in the office ten or fifteen minutes; Mr. Kennedy said she was a general spy, and ought to be hung; I told him that she was a young and giddy girl, ill-suited to such a mission—that she was not capable of being a spy; Mr. Kennedy said she "was just as capable of being a spy for all that; that she was just like the rest—even that woman who made a wagon of herself to carry quinine to the rebel soldiers; that her husband was in the rebel service and had not his arm in it, but that that did not dampen his ardor;" I did not get permission to see Mrs. Brinsmade.

Mr. Barlow said he wished to ask this witness a question as to Mr. Kennedy's manner. He had several interviews with him, and knew that Mr. Kennedy had two "usual manners." He wished to ascertain which manner Mr. Kennedy had in use at that time.

Q.—What was his general tone and manner while addressing you? A.—I thought it rather slow; he said "I, madam, I," in that abrupt manner.

Q.—He was not insulting to you? A.—No, Sir; nothing more than in addressing me in that manner. I made an application to Mr. Draper; Mr. Draper said he had written to Washington, and I should know about it as soon as he got an answer; he did not know anything about it himself.

To Mr. Bowen—I never knew Mr. Kennedy before; I introduced myself to him; I carried a letter of introduction to Mr. Draper stating my business; it was a letter from Dr. Tyng, whose politics and character were, I suppose, of the right stamp.

Mrs. Elliott—Except Dr. Tyng. (Laughter.)

Mr. Bowen, (smiling)—What are his politics?

Mrs. Elliott—Proper, of course. (Renewed laughter.)

To Mr. Bowen—(Testimony continued)—I do not recollect that Mr. Kennedy alluded to the War Department or the Police Department; he simply said he was waiting orders from "the Department." I inferred that to mean the Police Department.

Q.—Was there anything offensive in Mr. Kennedy's demeanor? Did he treat you with discourtesy? Did he insult you? A.—No, Sir; he did not insult me at all; I felt very much frightened, because I had never been in such a place before.

Mr. Bowen—Yes, Madam, the Police have terrors. (Laughter.)

Mr. Barlow, while disclaiming the position of counsel, [illegible] said that the evidence of Mrs. [illegible] was given [illegible] Mrs. Elliott. The lady was then [illegible]

TESTIMONY OF CHARLES REYNOLDS.

Charles Reynolds was the next witness; he drove the carriage on the night of Mrs. Brinsmade's return from Washington. He corroborated the statement already made by the lady as to the occurrences on that evening—particularly with reference to his having informed Mrs. Brinsmade's friend, at her request, where she was taken.

Mr. Barlow wished to prove by Mr. Butterworth a conversation with an Inspector of Police, who told Mr. Butterworth that the lady was to be sent South on the Roanoke the next day, and thereby prevented Mr. Butterworth from seeing Mr. Kennedy about it.

Mr. Bowen said they wished to exhaust the subject.

Mr. Barlow said that whether Mr. Kennedy had overstepped his duty or not somebody had evidently done so, else this lady would not have been shut up as she was for forty days. He hoped that for the interest of justice the Commissioners would let all the facts in the case be spread out on the record for that purpose.

Mr. Bowen, on behalf of the Commission, expressed the utmost anxiety to ascertain the truth, declaring that the Board would not sanction an [illegible] there is one bed in the house where there is blood, but this bed was produced by leeches; the doctors, I don't know of a lady from New-Jersey [illegible] at the Barnum's house, and her going away without paying the bill.

Q.—Was the doctor yet any neighbor that he talk for lunatic consultations? A.—He has, and I have often said it to him.

Q.—What was his income [illegible] don't like to answer that question; I suppose you know just as well I do—to produce abortions.

Q.—Does the Doctor call much of this mediums? A.—Yes, several hundred hours a year.

At this stage of the proceedings, the inquest was adjourned until 8 o'clock this afternoon.

There is much excitement in the neighborhood in regard to this horrible affair. The arrest of the marriage which conveyed the deceased to her father's residence, has been taken by Capt. Rowan of the Ninth Precinct, and will be detained as a witness. It is reported that he will testify that Miss Jones was a woman when she was taken from the carriage. The evidence yet to come against Dr. Brown, is said to be clear and positive. Coroner Rankin and Capt. Rowan are certainly entitled to much credit for the thorough manner in which they have commenced this important investigation. The seducer of the deceased has doubtless been arrested before this hour, and when the whole matter shall have been fully surveyed, it will appear to be one of the most sad and melancholy cases of the kind which have transpired in this vicinity for many years.

MILITARY FUNERAL.

Five Members of the Eighth New-York State Militia Buried with Appropriate Ceremonies.

The military funeral which took place yesterday afternoon, and in which the Eighth Regiment took part, cannot fail to add additional honor to that distinguished corps. During their three months campaign, five of their members (privates) were slain in battle. Their bodies were recently recovered, and brought to this City, where they were laid in state in the Armory, under a guard of honor. Yesterday the funeral ceremonies took place. The bodies were deposited in fine handsome glass hearses, and accompanied by the regiment, were brought to Trinity Church, where the funeral services took place. The following was the order of the cortege:

Section of Police from the Ninth Precinct.
Band and Drum Corps performing a dirge.
Fife and Blue Officers of the Eighth Regiment.
The Eighth Regiment, by Companies, with arms reversed and colors shrouded in crape.
Hearses containing the bodies of the following dead, with ten Pall-bearers on either side, selected from the Companies respectively:
Private F. Allen, late of Co. A.
Private Lawrence, late of Co. B.
Private Richards, late of Co. C.
Private Brown, late of Co. D.
Private Hopkins, late of Co. G.
Surgeon of Militia on horseback.
Troop of the Eighth Regiment, dismounted.

The route taken by the procession was through Grand-street to the Battery, up Broadway to Fourteenth-street, and down Broadway to Trinity Church.

During the whole march, the creditable appearance of the corps, and the sad labors in which they were engaged, attracted the attention of thousands.

Arrived at Trinity Church, the troops formed in line, and the hearses passed up in front of the great door of the edifice.

The bodies were then taken through the porch, and were met at a proper stand of the church, and bearing, who emerged from the rotunda room while a solemn voluntary was being performed by Mr. Cutler, and moved down the central aisle, remaining in the same order with the bodies, which were reverently placed on cerecloth in front of the chancel. During the ceremony, Rev. Dr. Vinton read the initiatory sentences of the burial service. The anthem, selected from the thirty-ninth and ninetieth psalms,

"Lord, let me know my end," &c., was then sung by the choir. The Lesson, the Committal to the Earth, and the closing prayers followed, in which Rev. Drs. Vinton, Cooke and Rev. Morgan Dix officiated. The 23d hymn, commencing—

God! our fathers by whom hard
They people still are blest,
Be with us through our pilgrimage
Conducts us to our rest.

was sung, the benediction was pronounced, and the bodies were again placed in the hearses.

Two of the bodies will be interred in Greenwood Cemetery. The others will be sent to their friends.

During the services at Trinity Church the edifice was crowded.

Military Movements.

The Fifteenth Massachusetts arrived here yesterday morning, from Boston, via the Norwich line. It comprises nine hundred men, who were principally recruited in Essex County. They are fully armed and equipped, and in every respect add credit by their appearance, to the Bay State. Some of the officers are said to be very wealthy. The Colonel, Lieutenant-Colonel and Major, have been in active service—the first two at Bull Run, and the latter has served thirteen months in one of the Massachusetts regiments. The corps is now at the Park Barracks. There is a band of fifteen pieces attached, which will be maintained by the officers. These troops are to join Gen. Banks' Expedition. The following are the leading officers:

NAVY AND ARMY INTELLIGENCE.

DEPARTURE OF THE NAUGATUCK.

Very unexpectedly, yesterday morning, Capt. Wilson, of the Revenue-battery Naugatuck, received orders to prepare for sea at once, and leave New-York as soon as possible. An excursion down the Bay had been planned, to try some ordnance experiments, Gen. Banks and other distinguished personages being expected on board, but the Washington dispatch changed the programme. Everything was got ready as speedily as possible, officers ordered to "stand by," and last evening the final preparations being complete, the fast little "water-clad" man-of-war left her anchorage and will be probably outside the lights to-day. We printed a list of her officers on Tuesday.

THE HARBOR FORTS—WARLIKE PREPARATIONS.

An immense quantity of cannon and military materials were landed on Governor's Island yesterday. A pontoon Parrott rifle and a large 13-inch gun are on the wharf, and even was all day engaged in carting ammunition from the beach to a temporary storehouse. These things are all ready for transporting at an hour's notice, and will not remain long in their present location. There are about 500 men, all told, now on the island. Col. Loomis is Commandant, and is ably assisted by Capt. Spence, the gentlemanly Executive Officer. The Forts are deserted, having been exchanged for duty on the battle-field at last. Occasionally a lonely straggler captured by Van Dorn makes his appearance, and is sent after his comrades. The permanent party numbers about 150 men, but the greater part of them are excused from military duty. A portion of Volunteer artillery, known as the Northern battalion, is drilling on the island. Orders for the departure of troops are daily expected.

Detachments of regular troops have recently been sent to Fort Richmond, Fort Schuyler and Fort Hamilton, to instruct the volunteers in handling the guns, should occasion of the most [illegible] matter be necessary. Artillery drill is daily practiced at all these forts, and the men are becoming very efficient.

Gen. Hawkins, Regular, still keeps his headquarters at Fort Hamilton. There are some companies of the Tenth Infantry, part of an gratifyer regiment, at present doing garrison duty there. Major Otes, who was wounded at Chickahominy, has been detached from the force, and ordered to West Point to command the corps there. Soldiers are ready for the asking, if needed.

The armament of Fort Columbus is occupying the attention of the ordnance authorities, who are anxious to be about increasing its efficiency.

A general Court-Martial has been in session at Fort Hamilton trying Capt. Wainwright, brother of Commodore Wilkinson. It adjourned to Governor's Island, where it is now in session. Col. Loomis is President, and Lieutenant-Colonel Judge Advocate. Annexed is a list of the officers of Governor's Island:

Col. Gh. Loomis, Fifth Infantry; Commanding.
Lieut.-Col. Bonham, Ninth Infantry; Capt. S. M. Spence, Fourth Infantry; Lieut. S. Casey, Fifth Infantry; Lieut. Fred. Dent, Sixth Infantry; Lieut. J. L. Thomas, Second Artillery; Lieut. A. Cole, Seventh Infantry; Lieut. W. P. Miller, Regular Infantry; Lieut. E. B. Chinn, Ninth Infantry; Assistant Dr. F. W. White and Surgeon Drake, Surgeons.

City Railways.

The Broadway Railway is now so far advanced that it is expected the cars will be running on it by New-Year's day. Aside from this, a road is now being built from Third-street through Thirty-fourth-street to Broadway, thence down the Broadway Railway to Fourteenth-street; thence east to the other side of the City, and down other streets to the foot of Grand-street.

The Hudson Railway, from the upper end of Central Park along the North River shore to the Battery, and the East River is going, or starting, to plan to be laid as soon as iron can be obtained.

Look Out for Shinplasters.

Numerous private individuals, as well as several of our City banks, are now illegally issuing shinplasters, and trying to pass them upon the public as money, when they are really as distinct from money itself as are the gutta percha medals issued by some of the hotels as a circulating medium.

The shinplasters are furnished with printed signatures, may be issued to any extent, and there is no way of enforcing their redemption. They may be easily counterfeited, and the public should refuse them peremptorily. There are $300,000 in postage stamps now held in the City, which have been in circulation. The only objection to their continued circulation comes from brokers, who cannot speculate therein. The reluctance of the public to take these stamps has given rise to a premium of six per cent. on nickel cents, while the premium on postal currency is still greater.

The Government has made arrangements to redeem all postage stamps in circulation, notwithstanding its notices forbidding their use as change. This redemption will be made in postage currency and Treasury notes, as soon as the postage currency is sufficiently abundant to prevent further purchases of stamps for change. If the redemption were commenced immediately, stamps would be bought for the sole purpose of exchanging them for currency, and speculating therewith. But this evil of speculation will soon be remedied by the abundance of postage currency, and the public should take care that they accept no kind of change but such as will be redeemed by the Government. Postage stamps are money, and will be redeemed, but the same cannot be said of any private shinplasters.

The capacity of the Government for issuing postal currency has from 60-day been increased to $50,000 per diem. One hundred and eighty thousand dollars per week is distributed in the States of New-York, Connecticut, Vermont and Eastern New-Jersey. Over $75,000 is distributed in this City. The banks each receive $1,500, and various other corporations from $100 to $500 per week, which is paid out in small large denominations, fractional notes and distributed to customers for Treasury Notes.

The Orphan Asylum Fair, Corner of Lexington-avenue and Forty-fifth-street.

With a view to liquidating the remaining indebtedness which encumbers their new building, the management opened a Fair upon the premises this week. The large hall devoted to the purpose is admirably lighted and ventilated, and is at their disposal free of those charges which swallow up a large portion of many such exhibitions. These are at present over one hundred little ones daily recipient of the Asylum bounties, and constant applications are made, which it is often necessary to refuse, because rooms still remain unfurnished. If a few more beds were supplied, the good done would be far beyond the ideas of the considerate but unstinted giver. Other simple articles of furniture are also much needed, and this to meet the demand of an influx of orphans who, perhaps, would not have been such but for the war. Two tiny little ones came in a few days since, who were left utterly unprovided for since their father's resignation had ceased, and, as it was at last discovered, he was among the slain at Antietam. The "Pet Sumter-boy," as he is called, is quite a noted character in the Asylum, his experience having led him to taste of the first bitter issues of our civil war. A description of articles displayed, upon the many liberally appointed stands would be out of place, but circumstances developing good feeling are always pleasant to record. Such was the case in regard to one of the most brilliant objects upon exhibition—a magnificent afghan. It was the gift of one entirely apart from the religious sentiment of the Society, and was the result of an off-hand invitation, that she should knit a pair of baby socks for the fair. Her artistic pudding fired under the inspiration of the cause of volunteers' orphans, and produced at length this elaborately wrought afghan, valued at $200. A new-fashioned silk-winder was exposed, which will gain, as it merits, the semi-ration and patronage of economical housewives, who believe that saving time is saving money. A rather inappropriate design, but one of singular utility if it could be realized, was an enormous elephant, with the complete establishment of a Union soldier upon his hitched back—the tent and every appurtenance of a well-to-do and self-considering bachelor, spread out in comfortable style, and the owner thereof leisurely promenading the animal's neck—it serving as a sort of lawn in front of his mansion. The refreshments at this Fair are all donated, and are of the best quality. In the evenings, the children of the Institution range themselves upon graduated benches at one end of the hall, and sing, in good time and voice, their hymns and school songs. There have been numerous changes at the last year's festival, and strenuous rule has given way to milder measures in the School Department. The happy faces of the almost baby pupils show this. The Board of Management has also undergone a slight change. There is a Committee which sits each Friday, for the purpose of receiving and dismissing children. Membership in the Society is obtained by an annual subscription of three dollars, or by the payment in one sum of fifty dollars. The applications of late have for the most part been from, or in behalf of half-orphans, for which the institution was not specially intended, yet, as they come in mourning for a father sacrificed upon the altar of our Union, they are invariably encouraged.

The New-York Prison Association.

A pamphlet, entitled, A Brief Statement of the Objects and Results of the Prison Association of New-York during the Seventeen Years of Its Existence, has been placed upon our table. It is a "statement" full of interest, as showing what may be done, what indeed has been done, to improve our prisons, and to raise the fallen and restore them to themselves and society. It has convinced us that the cheapest as well as the surest protection to society against the bad, is to make them good; to convert felons into upright and virtuous citizens. We learn, from this pamphlet, that of nearly 3,000 discharged convicts provided with situations by the Society, not five per cent. have ever returned to prison, while the great majority have been thoroughly reclaimed, are earning an honest living, and have the confidence and respect of the community in which they reside. This is surely a most respectable and impressive fact, and ought to conciliate the judgment and friendly interest of the public toward the Association, through which so important a work has been achieved.

The opinion entertained of the Society by leading men in our neighborhood may be seen by reference to our advertising columns, where certain resolutions passed by them will be found.

Court of General Sessions.

In this Court, yesterday, Bridget Warden and Michael Logan, jointly indicted for grand larceny, pleaded guilty to petit larceny and were remanded for sentence.

William Birch was tried for grand larceny and acquitted.

Frederick Reid was placed at the bar charged with manslaughter in killing John Donnelly with a knife, on the 5th of October last.

The case was opened by Acting District-Attorney Charles Whitehead.

The prisoner is a negro man, and, as appears by the testimony of colored witnesses, was drinking and frolic with four other colored men on Sunday morning, Oct. 5, drinking at upping-shops, knocking over gas-barrels, and [illegible] generally. Bilging is the technical name of that class for the act of stealing a passer's cane unawares and then running. Well named in that manner down Avenue B to Houston-st. and there came in contact with three Irishmen, who resented and threatened retaliation, with [illegible]. Thereupon the prisoner drew a knife and stabbed Donnelly, killing him instantly; another negro named Clawson drew his knife, a carving-knife, which was produced in Court, with a blade eighteen inches in length, and stabbed a second Irishman with a blow which did not prove fatal; and the third Irishman, being knocked down, all the negroes rushed down the street and were presently arrested in a drinking shop.

After the opening the Court adjourned to this morning at 11 o'clock when the trial will be resumed.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

Ladies' Association of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Resurrection.—The beautiful bouquet to be conveyed by the present exhibition of tempting eatables at the storeroom under the Fifth-avenue Hotel, lately occupied by Baxter & Co., comprises the extent lying between Thirty-fourth and Forty-seventh streets on the one hand, and Fifth and Sixth avenues on the other. This plaith for young, and the Sunday School attached is but a beginning of what we may expect. Already have sent hitherto scholars gathered about its standard, and the prospects of the children—about to publish—are far more than. Rev. R. O. Flame, a thorough and well-informed missionary, has organized and is carrying out systematically a plan of usefulness in that portion of the City where activity is most needed. Among the articles exposed for sale in the Hall were what were called kak bonnets, a very great improvement on anything in the way of hoods, and something that might become the greatest complaint. They were of gray and white, mixed, and white that pink, cutting a most ruddiness that. A very tasteful arrangement of forest leaves into a wreath was observable, and will no doubt sell well. There were old paintings and an array of wax bouquets that would have tempted any one to finger in admiration of their rare imitation of natural yet unless you have plenty of money, you had better not expose yourself to the allurement of charms that guarantee the beautiful perfect. A sentiment of great goodness seems to exist, however, and if one is prepared with about half of what he would expect to lay out on gregarious occasions of the kind, he will without doubt find himself intensely popular. This Fair will continue until the end of the week.

Festival of the Brooklyn Orphan Asylum.—The twenty-ninth annual Festival and Fair of the Brooklyn Orphan Asylum came off on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. The children, numbering between one and two hundred, assembled in the large hall, and gave their friends a most acceptable treat in the rendition of certain melodies appropriate not only to their quiet existence, but descriptive of our country's disturbance. "The Ship at Sea," which they sung with accurate expression, was called for three times, and was sorrowfully reminiscent of what we are passing through in our domestic strife. It breathed of hope, however, and a promise which all seemed to justly appreciate. Besides the regular educational routine of school hours, the girls of the Institution are taught light household duties and sewing, and prepared for general usefulness. Last year's fair and festival was particularly auspicious, and the liberal donations of the present, in spite of the inclement weather, inspire the Managers with hope that they may not find themselves lacking as the Winter approaches.

A Great Want Supplied—A Select Private Skating Pond for New-York.—The citizens of New-York who appreciate the delightful and exhilarating exercise of skating will be pleased to learn that a number of our enterprising citizens are about opening a private skating pond on Fifth-avenue, occupying two large blocks, between Fourth and Fifth avenues, Fifty-seventh and Fifty-ninth streets—open only to subscribers of character and respectability. This pond is now being fenced, and the necessary buildings are under contract. It will be open as soon as Jack Frost prepares the ice for skating for the use of skates. Joan L. Brown, Esq., is will be seen by the advertisement published in another column, is the General Superintendent of this new enterprise. The pond is to be under the management of Oscar F. Harriot, Esq., and popular President of the Washington Skating Club, of Brooklyn, last year. The pond is a large one, occupying over eleven acres of ground, but we fancy, from the temper of the people of New-York, that a pond of a hundred acres could easily be filled.

Abbreviated Candidate—Seventeenth District.—In several papers the name of the Republican candidate for Alderman in the Seventeenth District is given as William Downing, it should be William Dunning, an honest, upright citizen, who stands pledged to an economical and straightforward administration of the City's affairs; who is capable and efficient and deserving of the support of his fellow-citizens. Between the two Democratic nominees, Col. Long, alias Fernando Wood, and John McQuade, alias Jerry Cassidy, Mr. Dunning has a very fair chance of success, and we trust he will secure it.

Burglars in a Clothing Store.—About 5 o'clock, yesterday morning, the clothing store of Messrs. Mason & Silversteen, No. 419½ Grand-street, was entered by burglars, and robbed of about $70 worth of overcoats and $5 in money. Officers Rosier and Gray, of the Thirteenth Precinct, discovered the thieves as they were about leaving the premises, but the latter were too swift of foot for the Metropolitans, and therefore made good their escape.

A Man Lost Overboard.—John A. Kerr, recently in the employ of the Commercial Steamboat Company, was accidentally knocked overboard from the schooner Nisette, on the 16th inst., off Throg's Neck. The body has not been recovered. The deceased was stout built, about 30 years of age, and was dressed in a light corduroy or velveteen coat, with a piece of rope-yarn about his waist. Any information concerning him may be left with Coroner Wilbur, at No. 4 Centre-street.

Fatal Car Accident.—A boy named Patrick Shehan, eight years of age, residing at No. 90 Baxter-street, was run over by car No. 54, of the Fourth-avenue line, at the corner of White and Centre streets, on Wednesday night, and almost instantly killed. Mark Haley, the driver of the car, was immediately arrested by Officer Colomy, of the Sixth Precinct. Coroner Hanway was notified to hold an inquest upon the body.

Caution.—An impostor, we are informed is around, collecting subscriptions in the name of the Five Points House of Industry. Mr. S. B. Halliday, who is the only authorized collecting agent the Society has, is now in charge of the House, owing to the illness of Mr. Barlow, its Superintendent, and is not himself personally making calls.

Launched—At Pembroke (Maine) on the 11th inst., from the ship-yard of Henry E. Carter, a fine brig of about 250 tons register, built of the best materials, and called the Wallace Pack. She is owned in New-York by Pack & Carter, and intended for the general freighting business, to be commanded by Capt. Franklin Wallace.

The Esquimaux.—These cheerful strangers, who traverse in wonder the crowded aisles of the Museum, are to be kept here this week only. Mr. Hall, the Arctic explorer, who brought them on here, is with them, and does his best to explain their uncouth gibberish, and assist the crowd in its desire for knowledge. Go and see the Esquimaux. They are genuine.

Correction.—In the description of Mr. Whitney's vessel, which appeared in yesterday's Times, it was stated that "she has 562 inches of wood on her deck, and 692 inches of iron in her turret." It should be 5½ inches of wood and 6¾ inches of iron. The absurdity of the error must be manifest to all. The paragraph about the Montauk's guns should read, "each worked by 6 men." This, too, is corrected by the subsequent paragraph.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

The Brooklyn Board of Aldermen.—Now that the election is over, and the majorities of the successful candidates declared, there is an interested contest for the various positions in the gift of the Common Council. The Democrats having a decided majority, the appointments will probably all be made from that party; and the minor nominations will therefore be equal to an election. There are several candidates for nearly all the offices. The President of the Board is still unsettled. Alderman Wheeler, of the First Ward, Alderman Tremain, of the Ninth Ward, and Alderman O'Keefe, of the Twelfth Ward, appear to be the most prominent candidates. For Counsellor of the Board there are three aspirants, Messrs. Cornelius Wortmann, Winchester Barrett, and Alex. McCue, and for the City Clerkship, Messrs. Henry McCloskey and Wm. G. Bunce are the only aspirants. Some of the less important positions will doubtless be filled by reappointing the present incumbents—such as Keeper of the City Hall, Messenger of the Board, and but there is a prospect of changes in some, if not most of the more important offices, at least, such appears from present indications. The new Board will stand—six Democrats and eight Republicans, with a vacancy in the Fifth Ward caused by the election of Alderman Lucas to Assistant.

The Cumberland-street Orphan Asylum.—A fair for the benefit of this Institution, situated in Cumberland-street, between Myrtle and Park avenues, has been in progress for three days. The weather has been exceedingly unfavorable, and the number of visitors was consequently not as large as of those previous occasions. The contributions have, however, been liberal—a large amount of knitting, vegetables, &c., having been sent in. A very second bequest of 50,000 was made to the institution by the heirs of the late William B. Carey. This is the second bequest of a like amount since the organization of the Asylum a association. There are at present 110 children, between the ages of 3 and 12 years, cared for in the Asylum. All are well clothed, and present a healthy and contented appearance. There has been no sickness during the past Summer, and but one death during the year.

The Academy of the Visitation.—This edifice, situated on the corner of Johnson and Pearl streets, (formerly the family mansion of Rev. E. M. Johnson,) is being enlarged by the addition of two stories, which will not only afford the room required by the increasing number of pupils, under charge of the Roman Catholic Sisters of the Visitation, but will be a great improvement to the building which will, when completed, present a more modern appearance.

New-Jersey.

The Murder of an Infant.—Justice Cowrin, of Jersey City, held an inquest yesterday upon the body of a murdered infant, found buried in some rubbish in the cellar of house No. 44 Morris-street. Dr. Hassam, City Physician, testified that the child had been born alive, and that death was caused by suffocation; that, that the right lung was displaced that [illegible] and that the whole appearance indicated marks of violence. He found a colored woman, named Margaret Ross, in the house No. 44 Morris-street, who had all the appearance of being recently delivered of a child. Mrs. Annan testified to having found the remains of the child in the cellar. The jury rendered a verdict that the child was willfully murdered, and from the evidence they believe that said child was murdered by its mother, Margaret Ross. The woman was removed to the dead-house on Wednesday night, where she has remained most of the time in an unconscious state, as is supposed from the effects of poison, taken for the purpose of self-destruction. Her recovery is considered doubtful.

The Half-Dollars Case—$2,000 for the Plaintiff.

Before Judge Ellis.

Supreme Court—Circuit.

Stephen D. Dillaye vs. Emanuel B. Hart.—This case was detailed in the Times of yesterday, and is familiar to the public.

The trial now resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for $2,000. A motion was made for an extra allowance, but postponed until to-day.

Cases Where Two Counsel of Actions are Joined in One Complaint.

Before Judge Barnard.

Alex. Beebe vs. Roswell D. Hatch, Executor, et al.—This action was commenced in the lifetime of Robert Hogan, who, pending the action, died. It was then revived against the defendants, the personal representatives of Dr. Hogan, and continued before the Referee appointed in the first instance, who found that the complaint set out two causes of action, and reported in favor of the defendants on the first cause of action, and for the plaintiff on the second.

The plaintiff lost his costs, the right to do so being conceded. The defendants claimed that they were equally entitled to costs, which the taxing officer declined to allow until the question had been passed upon by the Court. The defendants now claimed costs, on the argument, under 2 Revised Statutes, (sec. 36, p. 517,) which provides that where there are two or more distinct and separate causes of action set up in the complaint, the plaintiff shall recover costs in the issues found in his favor, and the defendant on those found for him—and that this provision was not abrogated by the Court.

In Dresser vs. Wicks (2 Abb. n. 60,) it was held that where there are two or more distinct causes for action in separate counts, the parties shall recover costs on the counts found in their favor. On this point was also cited a Wend., 445, 612; ditto, 432, and 3 Denio, 165.

It was also contended that the current of decisions were in favor of the defendants' position, and that it had been recently so held in the Common Pleas, Hilton, J., (Parker vs. Curtis,) and in the Superior Court, Monell, J., (Porter vs. Willett,) neither of which cases had been reported. Decision reserved.

Roswell D. Hatch for motion; S. R. & F. E. Whitman opposed.

Effect of a Reversal of Judgment for a Criminal Offence, After Sentence, in Execution.

Before Judge Sutherland.

COMMON PLEAS—SPECIAL TERM.

The Matter of Frederick Freund.—This was a habeas corpus for the discharge of the petitioner from custody.

Freund was convicted of arson in the Over and Terminer, in January, 1860, and sentenced to the State Prison for life.

The case was taken to the Court of Appeals, and, after the prisoner had been incarcerated for nearly two years, the judgment was reversed and the prisoner remanded for a new trial.

It was now claimed that he should be discharged, having once been in actual imprisonment for the crime whereof he was charged. He could not be subjected to a second jeopardy for the same offence, nor suffer second punishment for the same offence. It was also contended that the present discharged the prisoner from custody, not only in respect to the offense involved, but all other offences less than capital committed prior to his being taken in execution of his sentence, and for which offences he had not been sentenced. The case will be argued on the 28th inst.

Henry Morrison, for petitioner; A. Oakey Hall, for the people.

Decisions.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice Barnard.

Fox et al. vs. Van Dine et al.—Motion granted, with $10 costs of motion.

Before Justice Ellis.

Attenburg et al. vs. Simonson et al.—Motion granted, $10 costs, to abide event.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Justice Sutherland.

Howell vs. the Madison-avenue Baptist Church.—The complaint must be dismissed with costs. Application for papers must be made to the Clerk of the Court.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

Our advices from the Army of the Potomac are not specially important. The bulk of our forces still remain on the north side of the Rappahannock, and the rebel pickets occupy the south bank. A company of rebel scouts, on Wednesday night, burnt a bridge on the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, near Catlett's Station. Scouts and refugees report that the rebel Gen. BAILEY is at Shepherd's Mills with 2,000 men; that Gen. MARSHALL is near the same place with a like number; that a rebel force of 10,000 is near Ashby's and Snicker's Gaps, and that a force of 8,000 rebels has advanced from Warrenton to Gaineesville, which has been evacuated by Gen. SIGEL. The letters of our special correspondents will be found of much interest, as detailing the recent movements of our army.

A dispatch to the Washington Star, under date of Fairfax Station, Nov. 19, says: "I hear that yesterday the main body of Gen. SIGEL's command took a position for the time being ranging from Centreville to the Bull Run battle-ground, including the latter within their lines; the General himself being now at Centreville. There has been, however, no signs of the enemy this side of Thoroughfare Gap, that I can hear of. SIGEL's movement in this direction, therefore, has been, doubtless, in connection and concert with the movement of BURNSIDE's army."

Gen. BUTLER writes in a recent letter, alluding to the battle of Baton Rouge, "the loss of Gen. WILLIAMS is irreparable; he fought the most gallant, chivalric, and best contested battle of the war, and had he remained to us one hour longer, we would have captured BRECKINRIDGE and his entire army."

News from New-Orleans to the 10th inst. is received by way of Havana. Admiral FARRAGUT arrived there on the 9th, and was received with all the honors by the French and English war vessels in port. An explosion had taken place on a train on the Algiers Railroad, near the Lafourche Station, by which eleven persons were killed and seventeen wounded. The explosion was caused by ammunition in a car behind the locomotive exploding. Lieut. BUCHANAN, commanding the naval forces cooperating with Gen. WEITZEL, has made another excursion up Bayou Teche, and encountered the rebel gunboat Cotton and several batteries on shore. He succeeded in dislodging the rebels from the shore batteries.

Our latest advices from Gen. GRANT's army at Holly Springs give to the effect that a halt has been made there, and that hospitals are being prepared, and large quantities of forage collected, as though it was intended to make it the base of operations. A depot for contrabands had also been established at Grand Junction.

The Chicago Journal, of Tuesday, says: "A gentleman at Cairo informs us that between 25,000 and 30,000 soldiers have passed down the river within the last two weeks. Those going down during last week went to Memphis and Helena—most of them to the former. It is now understood that Gen. SHERMAN, at present in Memphis, will cooperate with Gen. GRANT, now moving against the enemy in Mississippi. From this it would appear that the report that the new troops now going down the river are to be organized into a distinct army under Gen. McCLERNAND is not correct."

The Chicago Tribune insists that Government should immediately institute an inquiry into the charges preferred against the officers of the army at Helena, Ark., of having been engaged in cotton speculations. The Tribune says: "We have before us now a long letter from a Captain in that army—a man of sense and veracity—in which the particulars of certain operations are set forth, and the reason of the operations given. We decline to print it, but send it to the War Department without comment, entreating Mr. STANTON, publicly, to see to it that the offenders, if they shall prove such, are punished, or that the injustice of the rumors with which the whole West is filled, is exposed."

GENERAL NEWS.

The steamship Persia arrived at this port last night, with advices from Europe three days later than were received by the Nova Scotian. She left Liverpool on the 8th inst., and Queenstown on the 9th. Some of the papers were again giving currency to mediation rumors. The Paris correspondent of the London Times gives one to the effect that "overtures have been, or are to be made, by France to the Russian Government, with a view to taking into serious consideration the state of affairs in America; the disastrous effects of the civil war on Europe generally; and whether the time has not now come for the Powers to make a move toward mediation or recognition of the Confederate States." The London Herald also gives currency to a similar rumor. The depredations of the pirate Alabama were engaging the attention of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, some of the members of which do not like the freedom with which BURNS has disposed of British property on board some of his prizes. A memorial had been prepared on the subject, for presentation to Earl RUSSELL. The intelligence received by the Nova Scotian regarding the action of the Spanish Government in the case of the steamer Blanchi is corroborated. The Spanish authorities, however, apprehend no difficulty in adjusting the matter satisfactorily. The Continental news by this arrival is not of special importance.

We have, by way of Havana, some additional Mexican news of interest, including a résumé of proceedings on the opening of the Mexican Congress, which took place on the 20th ult. The Message of President JUAREZ is full of patriotism and hope, and the French will gather from it the assurance that the campaign undertaken by them will be no child's play. The President of the Chamber also made a patriotic speech on the occasion.

The trial of Police-Superintendent KENNEDY for alleged false imprisonment of Mrs. BEHRMANN and abuse of her and her friends, was commenced yesterday before the Police Commissioners. A number of witnesses were examined, including the unfortunate lady herself. The testimony as to the finding of arms, and incarceration and detention was interesting—especially that of Mrs. BEHRMANN. So far, the reputation of Mr. KENNEDY has fair to come out more unscathed than that of some other parties connected with the case. Mr. BAKER, Provost-Marshal of the War Department, is held up by the testimony in no enviable light.

Coroner HARNEY was engaged yesterday afternoon in the investigation of a most remarkable case of crime and death, involving the ruin of a young lady, and the reputation of an old and experienced physician of this City. Miss CLEMENTINA ARMENSON, about 20 years of age, and said to have been possessed of great beauty and accomplishments, died very suddenly on Wednesday night, and the facts and circumstances attending her death are such as to warrant the belief that crime of the darkest and most villainous nature has been perpetrated. The suspected parties are under arrest, and the whole affair will receive a thorough investigation at the hands of the officials who have it in charge. The father of the deceased is one of our most respected citizens.

The murder of ALABAMUS HARRISON, at Port Richmond, Staten Island, is yet undergoing investigation by Coroner DERAMY. The affair is still enveloped in painful mystery to the good people of that village and the law officers, but it is thought that certain suspicions arising from the drift of the evidence, may yet lead to some tangible proof as to who committed the murder. The funeral of the victim takes place to-day.

The Board of Councilmen were without a quorum at their meeting at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon—the members being mostly absorbed in politics—and adjourned till 5 o'clock on Monday afternoon.

The Supervisors, as County Canvassers, failed of a quorum at their meeting yesterday noon, and adjourned till noon to-day. This is the last (the 10th) day for which they can receive the compensation of $3 per day allowed by law.

The Councilmanic Market Committee failed to meet yesterday, as advertised, to consider the subject of the selection of a first-class market site on the North River, above Hammond-street.

The Tammany and Mozart Committees met again yesterday in Tammany Hall. Alderman BOOLE, declining the nomination for the Comptrollership, Judge MATHEW T. BRENNAN was nominated unanimously. For Corporation Counsel, the Mozart Committee, after some little discussion, nominated JOHN E. DEVLIN in preference to GEORGE C. GENIN. Each Committee notified the other's nomination.

The Albany Journal says: "The complexion of the Assembly is exactly this: Sixty-four Republican Union, elected over Democratic opponents; 63 Regular Democrats, and one who has always acted with the Republicans, but was nominated by both Conventions, and of course elected without opposition."

Hon. HORATIO SEYMOUR, Governor elect of the State, arrived in Albany on Wednesday, and will remain there for two or three days. He is the guest of Hon. ERASTUS CORNING.

Two prize cargoes of salt were sold by order of the Court, in Philadelphia, on Wednesday; 2,470 bushels of fine salt sold for 45 cents the bushel, and 7,260 bushels of ground salt brought 44½ cents the bushel. A lot of chicory was sold at 17½ cents the pound, and 39 cases of preserved vegetables brought $1 the case.

Gov. HOLBROOK has appointed Thursday, Dec. 4, as the day for Thanksgiving in Vermont—thus breaking the line, as all the other States observe the 27th of November.

The Military Prison at Alton, Ill., was partially destroyed by fire on the morning of Nov. 17. Several of the prisoners,—just how many could not be ascertained,—took advantage of the excitement to make their escape.

Quite an excitement was created in St. Louis on Monday by the statement that counterfeit $5 Treasury Notes,—photographs of the originals,—were in circulation. The alleged counterfeit proved to be a genuine bill which had passed through the hands of a butcher and become greased so as to be partially transparent.

The Secretary of War has officially notified the Indiana State authorities of the exchange of the Twelfth, Sixteenth, Sixty-sixth, Sixty-ninth, Seventy-first, and five companies of the Fifty-fifth Indiana Regiment, taken prisoners and paroled at Richmond, Ky., the Fiftieth, Sixtieth, Sixty-seventh, Sixty-eighth, Eighty-ninth, part of the Seventeenth and Seventy-fourth, taken at Munfordville, including their officers. The officers and men are enthusiastic over the news, and express a desire to be sent to the field without delay. The following officers have also been exchanged: Brig.-Gen. Manson, Col. Wilder, of the Seventeenth; Col. Gooding, of the Twenty-second; Lieut.-Col. Dunn, of the Twenty-ninth; Lieut. Mason, of the Thirteenth Battery; Quartermaster Inge, of the Thirty-fifth; Lieut. Borlet, of the Eighteenth; Capt. J. H. Ferry, Assistant Quartermaster; Lieut. Davis, Thirty-sixth; Penner, Thirty-ninth, and Coleman, Forty-second. The above regiments are all in camp, well disciplined, equipped in a magnificent manner, and, added to the Fifth Cavalry, with four batteries of artillery, are all said to be under marching orders. They will make an efficient division.

There are a large number of fugitive contrabands in St. Louis, and they are in such a destitute condition that the Mayor and military authorities have been obliged to adopt measures for their relief.

Official returns from all but three counties in New-Jersey, make the majority for Gov. PARKER 14,500 heavier than any ever before given in the State for a gubernatorial candidate.

The work of raising the sunken United States war vessels at Norfolk, Hampton Roads, &c., is actively and successfully progressing. The frigate United States was raised a few days since, pumped out, and towed to the Gosport Navy-yard. Work has also been commenced upon the line-of-battle-ships Delaware and Columbus, and they will probably be raised, whole, in a few days. Preparations for raising the Cumberland, Congress and Merrimac are also actively in progress. The contractor, Mr. T. F. WELLS, of Boston, is confident of his ability to raise the whole fleet—comprising thirteen war vessels—by the early part of next Spring. A very large force of divers and machinery are employed on the work, and an investment of upward of $70,000 has been made in the enterprise.

The Troy Times has raised its price, in consequence of the increased cost of paper.

The millers in Philadelphia, and to a certain extent elsewhere, have great trouble at the present time in procuring a sufficient number of flour barrels to carry on their operations. Second-hand barrels have advanced in price from eighteen to fifty cents each, and new ones can scarcely be obtained at any price.

Judge HALL, of Buffalo, has decided that sailors employed upon the Northwestern lakes are exempt from the draft.

In the Court of Sessions, yesterday, SHADRACK REIN, colored, was placed on trial for manslaughter in killing JOHN DONNELLY with a knife, on the 5th of October last. The trial will be resumed this morning.

The Hart-Dillaye case terminated at the Circuit of the Supreme Court, yesterday, Justice PETTIT, in a verdict for the plaintiff for $2,000. A motion for extra allowance was postponed until to-day. A case involving some interesting questions of criminal law was before Judge DALY, at the Special Term of Common Pleas, yesterday, a notice of which will be found in the law column.

The Stock Market worked very irregular yesterday, ultimately closing with more appearance of steadiness. The price of Gold was 130¾; bills on London, 144½; money 7 ⅌ cent, to the stock brokers as the rule of the day, with transactions at 6 ⅌ cent. on Government paper.

Breadstuffs were depressed yesterday, and prices generally lower. Cotton was cheaper and inactive. Provisions were in good request. Pork advanced. Groceries were quiet. Hay, Hops, Spices, Seeds, Hides, Tallow and Whisky were in moderate demand. Petroleum was freely offered at reduced rates, yet was less sought after. Limited Freight engagements were reported.

THE CITY SCOUTS.—The harmonious Democracy of our City have at last made their nominations for Comptroller and Corporation Counsel. The inevitable and immaculate BOOLE yesterday laid aside "all personal and selfish considerations," and respectfully declined the nomination for the Comptrollership, which was tendered him, and Judge MATHEW T. BRENNAN was unanimously associated to us in his stead.

We wonder for what happy accident the men who nominated Booth should have hit upon JOHN E. DEVLIN for Corporation Counsel. He is a gentleman and a man of talent, acquirements and character, and as he is quite certain, as things now look, to be elected, we can congratulate the City on the prospect of having this office respectably filled.

"What Has England to do With This?"

Such is the question put by the London Times, in response to the remonstrances of our Chamber of Commerce against the construction and equipment and manning of the Confederate cruiser, Alabama, in an English port. Like a certain other question of old, it is not seriously asked, and yet is a serious question.

We say it is not seriously asked. No living intelligence knows better than the London Times that the act complained of was an English wrong, which English authority ought to have prevented. Even were it weak enough to get entangled in its own sophistry, as a spider, sore and petulent with overmuch venom, sometimes sinks helpless, in its own meshes, yet every quibble and subterfuge was brushed away by the unqualified decision of the law officers of the Crown, that the preparation and sale of the Alabama for a belligerent purpose was in direct violation of the Queen's Proclamation. The Times knows, too, that that decision was accepted by the Government, and that measures were taken by it, ostensibly at least, against the departure of the vessel. Argument, upon our side of the water, is needless. British authority itself acknowledges the breach of neutrality. Nobody who ever read that proclamation, and knows what words mean, could have an instant's doubt about it. What our people complain of is not the perversion of law, but its non-enforcement. Our Consul at Liverpool, weeks before the Alabama sailed, acquainted the British Customs authorities of the true character of that vessel. They did nothing. The Board of Trade was then appealed to. Not a movement would they make. The Foreign Office itself was finally approached directly, but its action was so tardy and inadequate that the vessel put to sea in its own time, fully prepared in every particular for its piratical work. It is not morally possible, then, that the chief newspaper of England should seriously ask—What has England to do with this? The inquiry is simply an impertinence, and so designed.

And yet it is a serious question. England may treat it as cavalierly as she pleases, but the matter is none the less grave for all that. It is very important to us, and, if Englishmen were wiser, they would make it more important to themselves. There is substantially no difference between allowing a ship-of-war like the Alabama—built, owned, manned by Englishmen—to sail from an English port, under an English flag, to burn American ships, than to allow an English man-of-war itself to do it. Unless repudiated and redressed, the one is as much an act of war as would be the other. Our Government has been flagrantly delinquent if it has not so put the case to the English rulers. The occasion demands nothing short of that bold, plain truth. The time may not have yet come for a settlement, but it is of sovereign consequence that we keep the record clear. In all earthly probability we shall sometime be in a situation to enforce redress, if it be now denied. The rebellion, which now confines our energies at home, at worst cannot continue long. There are the best reasons for believing that it will be entirely overcome within the coming year, and that the Government from that time will be immeasurably stronger than ever for all belligerent purposes, foreign as well as domestic. There are, too, very strong arguments tending to show that of all the methods calculated to cure the sectional heart-burnings which this rebellion will leave, and to restore the old proud national spirit, none would be so effective as a good stiff foreign war for a year or two. This being a matter which touches our very vitality as a nation, of course the expense of such a war would be but a secondary consideration; and we shall be better able to bear that expense than England herself, with her thrice larger debt. But even though circumstances require us to postpone the settlement for years, it will not materially affect the matter. Americans have long memories, and they are not apt, in their foreign affairs, to recognize any statute of limitations. ANDREW JACKSON taught this to France in 1836, when, so much against her will, she was made to pay the twenty-five millions of francs for spoliations on American commerce, under the operation of the decrees of NAPOLEON. He gave a similar lesson to Naples in 1832. It may be England's turn next. Whether it be one or five, fifteen or thirty years hence, her turn will surely come, if she persists in launching corsairs against our commerce. For every dollar of American property thus destroyed, reparation will be required. If one Administration be not disposed to push the demand, even up to the final ultimatum, if necessary, another will. As nothing could be more just, so nothing would be more popular. JACKSON's stern dealings with France and Naples added greatly to his already great popularity, though our people were amicably disposed to both of those nations. Toward England there is not, and, for the next generation at least, there will not be any such feeling. She is known to have done all that she has dared to do, to break us down and destroy us, in the day of our agony. This thing will be remembered. England will be hated for it, till the last American now on the stage goes to his grave. She used to complain of the disposition of our masses to seek a quarrel with her. So far as that disposition existed, it was the heritage of 1776 and 1812; but it was as nothing to what will be the harvest of enmity she is now sowing. If the present outrage go on, England may depend upon it that the day of reckoning will come. The question, "What has England to do with this?" will find its due answer, either now or hereafter—either in prevention, or in penalty.

Slavery and the War.

The Chicago Times copies a paragraph from our columns, asserting that "the war is waged now, as it has been from the beginning, to crush the rebellion and restore the Union and the supremacy of the Constitution." After some personal share, which we pass as unworthy of notice, the Times says:

"The meaning here is, that there has been no change in the minds of the Administration at Washington as to the object for which the war should be prosecuted. Why, then, has there been a departure from the Crittenden Resolutions? Will it be averred that the Proclamation and the Crittenden resolutions are identical in meaning, or that the last is not opposed, in letter and spirit, to the first?"

We do aver just that. The Crittenden resolutions, adopted with substantial unanimity by Congress, declared the object of the war to be the restoration of the Union and the supremacy of the Constitution,—and that when that object shall have been attained the war should stop. We believe the object of the war to be precisely the same to-day. We believe that if the supremacy of the Constitution should be reestablished, if the Union should be restored,—if every State now in rebellion should resume its old place and its old obligations as one of the United States,—the war would stop instantly. Does the Chicago Times think differently? If so, we should like to know on what basis, or with what reason.

So far as the object of the war,—the motive for its prosecution,—the end which is sought to be accomplished by it, is concerned, the President's proclamation and the Crittenden resolutions are "identical in meaning." Both aim at precisely the same result. Both propose precisely the same object in prosecuting the war. Both would stop the war at the same time and on precisely the same contingency, namely, the restoration of the Union and the Constitution. The difference between those documents is this: The proclamation prescribes one means of carrying on the war,—one definite and distinct step to be taken, in order to make the war effectual, while the resolutions do not deal with that branch of the subject at all, but confine themselves wholly to a definition of the object and purpose of the war itself. The proclamation goes further than the resolutions,—but in the same direction. It embodies more, but it embodies nothing hostile to their "letter and spirit." The emancipation of slaves, with which the proclamation menaces the rebels if they persist in their rebellion, is not proposed as an object of the war; if it were, it would insist that the war should be carried on until that object is attained. But if the rebels see fit to desist from fighting,—if they will return to their allegiance,—the war will stop and Slavery will remain untouched.

This seems to us a perfectly just and common-sense view of this question. But the Chicago Times thinks that it is unconstitutional to interfere with Slavery, even for such a purpose. It says:

"The proclamation proposes, by force, to abolish an institution protected by the Constitution and involving interests of thousands of millions of dollars. How can this be done and the supremacy of the Constitution maintained?"

Does the Times hold that Slavery in the heart of South Carolina is "protected by the Constitution" to-day? If it is, then the National Government would be bound to put down an insurrection of the slaves in South Carolina, against the authorities of that State, who are themselves in rebellion against the National Government. In other words, we may fight the rebels, but must protect them at the same time. Does not the bare statement of the proposition demonstrate its absurdity? The rebels at the South have repudiated the Constitution,—its obligations and its guarantees,—the duties it imposed upon them and the protection it gave them. They cannot repudiate the one without repudiating the other also. We cannot possibly give them the one except on condition of their yielding the other. We cannot protect them, while their rebellion compels us to fight them.

But the Times says upon this point:

"If the rebels have repudiated the obligations of the Constitution, will it be urged that we are justified in following their example? The object of the war is to reduce rebels to the authority of the Constitution. With what propriety can we demand obedience from them, while treating it with contempt ourselves? From what source do we derive authority to deny them its protection after they have laid down their arms?"

After the rebels shall have "laid down their arms," the National Government will not deny them its protection. The President's proclamation distinctly invites them to lay down their arms, as the condition and guarantee of receiving that aid and support which the Constitution secures them. All they have to do to secure its protection, is again to come under its shelter. Is there anything unreasonable in this?

But it is asked where do we get the right to strike at Slavery even as a means of crushing the rebellion? Precisely where we get the right to strike at any other element of power which the rebellion is using against us. The power to make war implies and involves the power to strike at many things which, in a state of peace, the Constitution protects. That instrument provides, for example, that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law;"—yet we are daily depriving persons in the rebel ranks of "life, liberty and property" without any process of law whatever. Must we stop to indict, arrest and try every rebel soldier before our troops can fire upon him or take him prisoner? Slavery is a prodigious element of strength to the rebellion. It multiplies its military power,—for it releases every white man from labor and sends him to the field. It is a tremendous weapon in the hands of the rebels,—aimed and wielded with fatal effect at the national existence. Why have not our military authorities precisely the same right to deprive the rebellion of that weapon which they have to deprive it of any other? Why must slaves be left in rebel hands to do their work, while muskets and rifled cannon may be taken from them?

In all just sense of the term it is this an Abolition war. By no fair construction of its language can the President's proclamation be deemed an Abolition paper. It warns the rebels that if they persist in rejecting the Constitution, they shall be deprived of the protection it gives them. But it also gives them notice that if they will return to its jurisdiction, they shall have the full benefit of the guarantees which it embodies. They can save Slavery, if they choose to do so; if they refuse, they will have only themselves to blame.

The Struggle in Virginia.

It is understood that a number of the Expeditions which were being gotten up for operating on the Southern coast and against points of secondary importance, have been abandoned, and that the forces in the field will now be directed to the main purpose of capturing Richmond and defeating the principal rebel army. The number of men at this moment in the military service of the Government is greater than ever before; but it is clear enough that if we abstract from our Eastern army troops sufficient to capture and hold Texas, to seize and occupy Charleston, Savannah and Mobile, and to operate in North Carolina, Louisiana and Florida, we shall really be able to bring not more than a moiety of our strength against that great rebel force in Virginia which gives to the Confederacy coherency and vitality. The main thing to be done, in a military point of view, and the chief thing which the country desires, is the defeat of Gen. LEE. His army broken, and the Confederacy will perish.

The Government, we suppose, is not behind the people in comprehending that this is really the thing that is to be done. And seeing that the matter is practicable—seeing that there can be no doubt that were all our forces concentrated in Virginia and buried upon the rebel army and the rebel Capital, they would, if handled with any sort of skill, surely overthrow the one and capture the other, we presume that the work cut out for the Winter is the accomplishment of these objects. What may happen after these ends are achieved, it is useless for any one to speculate upon. The rebel army and Government might, perchance, move to Raleigh or Columbia, or some other point in the far South. Whether they did so or not, would depend very much upon what condition their defeat might leave them in. If their defeat proved a Waterloo—as why should it not?—it would probably be some time before we learned where they proposed to reorganize their shattered forces. In fact, were Virginia in our possession, along with the Mississippi River, the aspect of the rebellion would be so entirely changed that new plans of campaign would be inevitable. We could then, at our leisure, send off detachments to possess Texas, to operate on the coast, and to capture the few cities on the Southern seaboard which it would be worth while to occupy.

The change of base to Fredericksburgh, and the rapid movement of all available troops to other points in Virginia, to cooperate with BURNSIDE, would seem to indicate that no time is to be lost in carrying out the new programme. We presume that the greater part of the Army of the Potomac has by this time reached Fredericksburgh, and we know that preparations for joint action from other quarters are in such a state of forwardness that there will be no delay when BURNSIDE is ready. Those who anticipated that BURNSIDE would be in Richmond in ten days from the time when he began to change his base will probably be disappointed. The circumstances under which his army is moved, the country over which it is moved, and the mass of men and material that are involved in the movement, forbid that he should sweep down from Warrenton to the rebel Capital with any such velocity as PLEASANTON's Cavalry sweep after the columns of Stonewall JACKSON. He has, too, a mighty, a vigilant, a skillful and a desperate foe within a few miles of his line of advance, and it is necessary that he should so move as to circumvent the purposes of that enemy, whatever they may be. But, as we intimated once before, Gen. BURNSIDE's stay at Fredericksburgh will be short. Whatever may be the enemy's plans, they will not succeed in retaining him there.

Of the movements of LEE's army we are as yet illy informed. We have no definite news of its having left Gordonsville, though it is stated with a good deal of certainty that JACKSON has left the Shenandoah Valley, and joined his forces with the main body. LEE is very likely delaying to see the development of BURNSIDE's plan. By remaining at Gordonsville he retains the entire body of troops, under Gen. SIGEL, between Manassas and Washington, which, in case of his advance to Richmond, might be detached to act directly with BURNSIDE. When BURNSIDE's movement southward from Fredericksburgh begins, LEE can rush his troops forward from Gordonsville over the Virginia Central Railroad, and meet our advance at the point where the Fredericksburgh road crosses the former, some twenty miles north of Richmond. Both armies are about the same distance from the rebel Capital; but LEE is so situated that he can checkmate our advance with some facility. If he attempt that, however, it will occupy the whole of his army, and then will be the moment when our Virginia forces, at other points of the compass, can be brought into effectual service.

The grand manœuverings of the two great combatants are now progressing with such rapidity, and in both cases they are bearing toward points of such fundamental importance, that we need not be astonished if any day sees the whole matter brought to a head-way. Our battles have steadily increased in magnitude since the war began, but the one now pending, and whose shock will soon shake the world, has in it elements of decisiveness as well as vastness, which surpass any other combat in this struggle of giants.

Foreign Relations.

We publish this morning an interesting account of a recent reunion at Santiago, the Capital of Chili, at which were present the American Minister and Dr. MARCY, of the State Department, with many distinguished Chilian and other South American Statesmen.

The occasion was the promotion of a union among the various Republics on this Continent, and the expression of sympathy toward the North in its struggle for the maintenance of Democratic Institutions against domestic foes, and toward Mexico in her struggle to preserve those institutions against an attack from without in the attempt of France to again establish European domination on this Continent.

The speeches delivered on the occasion show that a movement toward the establishment of such an Union is already initiated, and that the sentiment throughout the Spanish American Republics is already ripe for such an alliance with the United States. All of these Republics are alarmed by the movements of France against Mexico, and look upon that step as but the precursor of similar attacks upon their own independence, unless resisted at the outset, and they are turning to the North, now that the barrier of Slavery and filibusterism is removed, with frank trust and cordial confidence of sympathy and support.

We have been too prone to let our thoughts rest constantly upon Europe, and to be startled and alarmed by the first rumor of unfavorable appearances there. We have no right to expect sympathy or even willing neutrality from that quarter. Monarchical Europe must of necessity look with unfavorable eyes upon Republican America. But our true safety is to turn our attention to our own continent, and to cultivate there those elements of union and of alliance in which would be found a strength too great for any attack from across the seas.

America has all the elements within herself to resist and to defy any action of the European Powers, and half the time and thought now bestowed upon petty and undignified attempts to win their applause or avert their frown, would have ere this established and cemented relations of alliance and friendship with our sister Republics on this continent, bound to us by a community of interest, which would not only have effectually prevented any attempt at European interference on this continent, but which would have relieved those Republics from the evils of that system of European intrigue and diplomacy which has been their chief barrier to stability and progress since their independence.

"America for the Americans," as our rallying cry, and an united resolution to shake off that incubus of diplomatic influence everywhere persistently and constantly exerted by Europe on this Continent, against the success of Republican Institutions and the permanency of Constitutional Government, would at once and effectually enable us to form such an union of all the American Republics as would forever relieve us and them from all further apprehension, whether real or imaginary, of danger from any European Power.

Our relations and interests on this Continent have been too much neglected, and the true means of our protection against the institutions and designs of Europe, have been overlooked in the eagerness with which we have watched the varying phases which have appeared on the surface of a policy which, in its depths, must always be hostile to the United States. Our true safety against Europe is in a United America.

ANOTHER SPEECH FROM GOV. SEYMOUR.—Gov. SEYMOUR made a speech at Rome a few days since, on the results of the late canvass. We have read it carefully, in order to discover from it precisely what principles were established by his recent election. We ascertain, beyond all doubt, that the Governor regards the election as having been one of unusual importance—that something of transcendent interest was settled by it, and that the whole country and the whole world will rejoice over it with great exultation. But beyond that, even his ideas seem to be somewhat vague. It has been, he says, a triumph for the Union and the Constitution—one which secures us here at the North from tyranny, and which, by some mysterious process unexplained, is to have a wonderful effect on the Southern States. On this point the Governor says:

"We have shown to loyal men at the South, (and there are many thousand loyal there, who only waited to hear that they could be safe in the hands of the Union and under the shield of the Constitution, to declare themselves,) from this time forth you will hear the evidences that we have kindled anew the fires of patriotism all over the land, and more particularly in those portions of it which have been cursed, and seared, and blasted by this great rebellion."

We don't quite understand this,—but presume it is all right. We never heard of a Union man at the South who had any apprehensions about his "safety," after he should get out of the realms of rebeldom. None of those who have made their escape and come North, have had any trouble on that score. It is only while they stay there that they are not safe;—they dare not "declare themselves" for the Union, because they are sure to be hung for doing so. We don't exactly see how Gov. SEYMOUR's election is to give them any new assurances on this point, and we doubt very much whether they will "declare themselves" a moment sooner on account of it.

The one thing needful for them is deliverance from the rebel despotism which crushes them; and that can only be achieved by breaking down the military power which upholds it—by a vigorous, energetic, determined prosecution of the war. Whether Gov. SEYMOUR is in favor of this or not we have searched his speech to ascertain,—but without effect. He has not one solitary syllable to say on that subject. He does not even allude to it. It is evident that we must wait until he makes another,—which wont be long.

—Mme. Geffard, wife of the President of the Republic of Hayti, who has been for some time residing privately in Paris, has presented the Society of the Prince Imperial with a donation of 1,000 francs.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, THURSDAY, NOV. 20.

MILITARY GOVERNORS.

The President, and, indeed, all authorities here, express themselves greatly pleased with the evident returning kindness and confidence of the public mind throughout the Loyal States.

OFFICERS STRICKEN FROM THE ROLLS.

One hundred officers, absent from their commands without leave, being the first installment of the one thousand who are marked for dismissal, were yesterday struck from the rolls of the army, and their names will be published in a General Order stating the offences of each, which order will be sent to Governors of all loyal States for publication in official State journals, and with directions that none of the men so dismissed shall ever hereafter be commissioned. The military guillotine is now fully at work, and the President is resolved to rid the service of all strikers, cowards, drunkards, shifters and men incompetent for their positions. Secret Provost-Marshals in Philadelphia to-day sent on an additional list of nearly four hundred officers, who have been loafing without leave in hotels and boarding-houses of that city. Similar visitations are being made in New-York, Boston and elsewhere.

ILLINOIS AFFAIRS.

Gov. YATES and Congressman ARNOLD, of Illinois, had an interview, to-day, with the President, in relation to widening the Illinois and Michigan Canal, so as to admit of the passage of gunboats from the Mississippi River to the lakes, asking the President to recommend the project in his forthcoming Message to Congress. Gov. YATES urged upon the President the necessity of standing by the recent Emancipation Proclamation, if he hoped for a speedy suppression of the rebellion. The President replied that he was as much determined in his course now as he had ever been. Gov. YATES protested to the President against the arming of Illinois troops with Arms of European manufacture.

AN OFFICER ARRESTED.

Lieut. FRANCIS TERRY, of the Second New-York Cavalry, was arrested to-day, for using disloyal language. He was sent to the Old Capitol Prison and will be tried by Court-martial.

OLD CAPITOL PRISONERS.

Major SCHENCKEL, A. A. G. to Gen. WADSWORTH, will investigate the cases of all prisoners confined in the Old Capitol.

GEN. WADSWORTH.

Gen. WADSWORTH has leave of absence for fifteen days, from the 26th of November.

JOHN ROSS.

JOHN ROSS, head Chief of the Cherokee nation, arrived here yesterday morning, and had an interview with Commissioner DOLE, of the Indian Bureau, in relation to affairs among the Cherokees. ROSS is very anxious that the Government should send a sufficient force to the Indian Territory, to protect the loyal Indians against the rebels.

LATEST FROM AQUIA CREEK.

The Star, of this evening, has the following:

AQUIA CREEK, Wednesday, Nov. 19.

The Construction Corps is doing its best to have the railroad repaired, but the preliminary preparations of materials for the repair, which should have been made, have been sadly neglected.

The rebels being undisturbed in this quarter after our evacuation of Fredericksburgh, improved their opportunity to carry off all the telegraph wire, iron rails, railroad chairs, &c., that they could get away, as well as to burn all the bridges as thoroughly as possible. The consequence is that much larger supplies of war materials have been found requisite here for repairing the railroads disabled by the rebels.

ANOTHER CAPTURE.

The Washington Star of this evening says the Navy Department has information of the recent capture of the steamer California, from Mobile, bound to Havana, loaded with from 700 to 1,000 bales of cotton. She was captured by the Montgomery. The information was brought by the United States steamer Connecticut.

REVENUE DECISIONS.

The following decisions have been made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in regard to harness and upper leather: First, the tax on harness leather is seven mills per pound, and is to be paid but once, whether the leather is tanned and finished by the same parties in the same place, or by different parties in different places. Second, finished or curried upper leather, except calfskins, made from rough leather, hemlock tanned, or from rough leather tanned in whole or in part with oak, on which rough leather the tax of seven mills or one cent per pound, as the case may be, has already been paid, is not subject to any additional tax in consequence of such finishing or currying, wherever the latter may be done.

Acting Assistant Paymaster HENRY J. REDGERSON has been ordered to the steamer Daylight.

Amusements.

MASON JONES AT IRVING HALL.—To-night, at Irving Hall, Mr. MASON JONES, the gifted Irish orator, whose entertainments have created the greatest enthusiasm among the leading literary circles of the City, will lecture upon "Milton, his character and Writings." Mr. JONES deserves, as he will undoubtedly have, an overflowing audience.

FORREST AT THE BROOKLYN ACADEMY.—Last night Mr. FORREST treated a large and enthusiastic Brooklyn audience to his gladiatorial style. Spartacus was all himself, and his vehement outbursts of Thracian eloquence elicited round upon round of applause, and a "call-out" between the several acts. To-night, "Richard the Third."

LATER FROM NEW-ORLEANS.

Explosion of an Ammunition Car on the Algiers Railroad.

Eleven Persons Killed and Seventeen Wounded.

FURTHER NAVAL OPERATIONS OF BAYOU TECHE

From Our Own Correspondent.

HAVANA, Saturday, Nov. 15, 1862.

The Pajaro del Oceano arrived here on the 13th, bringing news from New-Orleans up to the 10th inst.

Admiral FARRAGUT arrived in New-Orleans at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of the 9th. The English sloop Rinaldo fired a salute of 17 guns, and the French vessel-of-war Cathinat one of 13 guns. The Hartford, which carried the Admiral's flag, replied to these demonstrations of naval courtesy. The United States steamer Tennessee had also arrived.

In an extra published on the 10th inst., the National Advocate states that a train on the Algiers Railroad was destroyed on the afternoon of the 7th, a quarter of a mile distant from the Lafourche Station, by the explosion of the ammunition in a car behind the tender of the locomotive. About twenty officers and privates were wounded, and the limbs of some six or seven persons, supposed to have been in the ammunition car about the time of the explosion, were scattered in all directions. According to the Delta eleven persons were killed by the accident and seventeen wounded. It was supposed, says the same paper, that the accident was caused by a spark from the cigar of some imprudent smoker. The two cars were completely destroyed.

A report prevailed in New-Orleans that Gen. BURLER was a passenger on this ill-fated train, and that he was mortally wounded. The Delta contradicts the report, and states that the General was in the city in the enjoyment of excellent health.

The news received from Bayou Lafourche is very sad. The estates were almost entirely deserted and the crops were considered ruined. The French plantations were particularly desolate.

On the afternoon of Saturday, the 8th, there was not a bale of cotton in the New-Orleans market, nor a hogshead of sugar of the new crop. Of the last crop there were sold 164 hhds. prime at 8¾ cents. No molasses.

A letter to the Delta, dated at Gen. WEITZEL's headquarters, Nov. 5, states that Lieut. BUCHANAN had returned from another excursion up the Bayou Teche, on board of the Star. He again encountered the gunboat Cotton. The rebels had constructed batteries on both sides the bayou, but he succeeded in dislodging them. He had three men killed in the engagement.

The Democratic Nominations.

ALDERMAN BOOLE DECLINES THE NOMINATION FOR COMPTROLLER—NOMINATION OF MATTHEW T. BRENNAN FOR COMPTROLLER AND JOHN E. DEVELIN FOR CORPORATION COUNSEL.

At 1 o'clock, yesterday, the Tammany Committee of Twenty again met. On the organization of the meeting, the Committee who were appointed to acquaint Alderman BOOLE with his nomination, introduced that gentleman in person. He spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN: When you nominated me yesterday, I cannot say that I was wholly taken by surprise. I was aware that it was the intention of the devoted and zealous friends who have rallied to my support that I should be nominated if it were in their power to accomplish it. Knowing their earnestness, influence and ability I was led to anticipate the result at which you arrived. The Convention by an enthusiastic vote has made my nomination unanimous. By the union effected between Tammany Hall and Mozart Hall, the incorsement and ratification of your nomination for Comptroller are already agreed to be made by Mozart Hall as the nomination of Mozart Hall, for Counsel to the Corporation" is to be your nomination. I, therefore, have the honor of being the candidate of the united Democracy, for the responsible and powerful office of Comptroller of the City of New-York. This is a position which should satisfy the pride and ambition of any man, and I assure you it more than satisfies mine. Notwithstanding that I anticipated your action, I have asked time to deliberate whether I should accept the nomination you have conferred. I have calmly reflected upon this question, and I have decided upon the course I shall adopt. It is due to my friends and to myself, that I should state the reasons which have controlled my decision. With feelings of overflowing gratitude to the Democratic party, I have considered that my first duty was to that party, and that my own personal welfare should be last and subordinate to all others. I have therefore laid aside all personal and selfish considerations, and determined what is my duty as a Democrat to the Democratic party at this important period in our public affairs, and under the peculiar circumstances affecting our organization. Gentlemen, as you all know, the contest which has been so long going on in Tammany Hall in regard to this office, has been attended with more excitement, bitter disappointment, and angry feeling than any ever known in the history of our party. We know that the feeling has not been wholly allayed. It is the necessary result of all great struggles within the ranks of a party for ascendancy—earnest, determined men struggling for the mastery—that a deep feeling of disappointment and at times of resentment must result. It has been my fortune to have been in the front ranks of the struggle through which we have passed. It is not my habit to delude myself by shutting my eyes to the facts which surround me. I am accustomed to look events sternly in the face. I am bound to say that I do not believe that the party would be as cordially and earnestly united upon my nomination as if I had not participated in the contest in our organization through which we have passed, and as would be necessary to preserve the Democratic Party in the great strength which it manifested at the last election. The Democratic Party is now united and strong—it must be kept together and made still stronger. The very life of our country demands and requires it. I will not be the man to stand between that entire unity so essential to its present duty and future mission. I have come to the conclusion to surrender back into your hands the nomination you have honored me with, and to ask you to confer it upon some other man upon whom the whole party can more thoroughly, cordially and heartily unite, than myself. The Comptrollership is now in Republican hands, and every one of the enormous number of its offices is filled with an active, zealous partisan of the Republican party. It is disgraceful that in this great Democratic City, with its 50,000 majority, that such should be the case. It has been the result of our own divisions. We are now united. The Democracy must have this office. The Republican party, through unscrupulous and special legislation, are in possession also of the Police power and patronage, and have appropriated every source of official influence in our city. They have the Custom-house, Post-office, and all that belongs to the General Government, and every department, every atom of patronage, is devoted to the most ultra partizanship. Democrats have been proscribed and driven from every office and every position to make way for Republicans, and this too when the great war for the Union is being maintained in so large a degree by gallant and patriotic members of that party. While Democrats fight the battles of the country, Republicans stay at home to fill the offices and wage a war of political proscription. Gentlemen, I shall stand aside that "Union and Victory" may be the watchword of the coming contest. We hear that Democrats who have been defeated fairly in the struggle for this office intend to run as stump candidates to defeat the regular candidate of the Democracy. They can only do this for the single purpose of betraying our party to the Abolitionists. It is treason purchased with gold. They are in the pay of our opponents. They cannot accomplish their treacherous end but can object. The Democracy will take care of them. Let us pay no heed to them, except to consign them to eternal infamy. Political death is the only fate due to political traitors. I thank you most gratefully for the distinguished honor you have conferred upon me by your unanimous nomination and respectfully decline it for the reasons I have stated. Availing myself of my privilege as a member of this Convention, I move you, Mr. Chairman, that we now proceed to nominate a candidate for the office of Comptroller.

Judge MATTHEW T. BRENNAN was then proposed as a candidate for the nomination. A ballot was taken, and he was unanimously elected. Senator BRADLEY announced to anxious outsiders that Judge BRENNAN was nominated, and received a round of cheers for his pains. The Committee then adjourned till 4 o'clock.

At the same hour the Mozart Committee also met. After some little discussion, as to whether GERRIT C. GREENE or JOHN E. DEVELIN should be nominated, a ballot was taken, which resulted in the unanimous [illegible] Journal till 4.

At 4 o'clock the Committee again met, and unanimously ratified the choice of Democracy. Venerable WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT then rose and read a speech, in which he congratulated the Democrats on the union of the two parties; he hoped the union would be lasting and sincere. The Committee then adjourned sine die.

Gen. McClellan at the Fifth-avenue Hotel.

SERENADE BY THE YOUNG MEN'S DEMOCRATIC ASSOCIATION—SPEECH OF THE GENERAL, ETC.

When it became generally known yesterday that Gen. McCLELLAN had left Trenton, in the State of New-Jersey, and had arrived at the Fifth-avenue Hotel, quite a number of his personal friends and admirers called to see him at his rooms. Many of them, however, were disappointed, for the General left the hotel at 10 A. M. and did not return until 2 P. M. The fact that he was not at his published headquarters, created some doubt as to whether he was really in the City, and, consequently, there were but few callers until evening, when, as had been publicly announced, he was to be serenaded by the Young Men's Democratic Association. The time stated for the commencement of the serenade was 10 P. M., but as early as 9 o'clock there were several hundred people present. About that hour the Committee appointed by the Common Council to extend to him the hospitalities of the City, headed by Alderman FARLEY, was present and ready to perform the duty to which it had been assigned, but after many inquiries and a fruitless search for the General, the Committee retired—not over well pleased with the failure of the visit. There were also a number of other distinguished gentlemen present. Among them, Ex-Chief of Police MAXWELL, Mr. BRENNAN, D. D. CONOVER, Alderman F. I. A. BOOLE, Alderman BEARDLEY and others—all anxious to see the General, but unfortunately for them he was not to be seen. He had gone out, so it was said, to visit some friends, and of course, was not in the hotel. Here was another disappointment; but as some members of the Seventh Regiment band appeared, it was taken for granted that the serenade would be given, and they all remained.

At 20 minutes of 11 o'clock the Young Men's Democratic Association appeared in front of the hotel, with Capt. RUTHERS' gun, and band and gun began to play. With them there came several hundred citizens, who enlivened the occasion by cheers for Gen. McCLELLAN and repeated groans for Gen. FREMONT and Mr. GREELEY. There was a call for three cheers for Gen. BURNSIDE, which was responded to with one faint cheer, and a dio-away.

At length the General appeared, accompanied by Mr. LUKE CORSBRIE, President of the Young Men's Democratic Association, and the assemblage gave cheer after cheer, lasting for fully a minute. The President (of the Association made quite a attempt to introduce the General, and was as often interrupted by cheers for the late Commander of the Army of the Potomac. Finally, he succeeded in introducing him, and when the renewed cheering had ceased, the General spoke as follows:

GEN. M'CLELLAN'S SPEECH.

MY FRIENDS: I thank you, cordially, for this spontaneous tribute of regard. I accept it not for myself, but for the Army of the Potomac, which I once commanded, [cheers,] and in which you are so deeply interested. Every battle, from Yorktown to Antietam, has added new proofs of the courage and devotion of the citizen soldiers of New-York, and has increased the debt of gratitude to them. No portion of the Republic has more liberally given its millions of money and thousands of men to the cause than this great Metropolis. At the commencement of the struggle no community was more prompt in responding to the appeal of the Government for aid. No community has a greater stake in the success of our cause than this—none more closely bound by the ties of kindred to the army with which I have been so long associated. I, therefore, and my former comrades with me, will feel doubly honored by the occasion this evening. And it is with a heart full to overflowing with gratitude, that I again thank you for your presence to-night. You know that I am still a soldier, and you will not expect a speech from me; and you will, therefore, allow me to bid you good night.

The General retired amid renewed cheering, and soon afterward all was quiet in front of the Fifth-avenue Hotel.

LUMBER—The inquiry has been active for Eastern Spruce and Pine at advancing prices, in view of the reduced stock and light current arrivals. The Albany Evening Journal says of that market: "Receipts of Lumber continue light, and but little more will arrive this season. Shipments have been large, and the demand for vessels continues, particularly for New-York, where the stock on hand is light; and there is a great desire to increase it before the close of navigation. A fair assortment is in market, though some kinds, as 1½ Pine, and ¾ Whitewood, are in a very limited supply. Freights for East and South are quick, and at advancing rates. The receipts by the Erie and Champlain Canals, during the second week in November, in the years named, were as follows:

	Boards and Scantling. ft.	Shingles. M.	Timber, Square, c. ft.	Staves, c. ft.
1860	4,568,000	394	—	2,440,400

1862	2,707,218	15	4,000	3,597,540

The figures show a steady falling off in the receipts of Boards and Scantling and Shingles, and an increase in Timber and Staves. The receipts by the Erie and Champlain Canals, from the opening of navigation to Nov. 15, in the years named, were as follows:

	Boards and Scantling. ft.	Shingles. M.	Timber, Square, c. ft.	Staves, c. ft.
1860	264,601,000	41,767	40,025	136,666,177
1861	150,974,641	30,745	12,534	127,564,984
1862	214,860,270	31,672	121,754	104,466,801

Canal navigation is rapidly drawing to a close, and from the indications the receipts of Boards and Scantling at the close of the season will show an excess over last year of about 50,000,000 feet.

The Union men of Kentucky are greatly dissatisfied because the Government does not authorize a contribution to be levied upon wealthy Secessionists, to prevent the starvation of the loyal people of the mountains and border counties, who have been stripped of everything by the raids of MORGAN, BRAGG, SMITH & Co. Unionists here say unless the Government gives such authority, they will soon be forced to supply rations for the above purpose.

FROM HAVANA.

The Case of the Steamer Blanche—What Her Cargo Consisted of—Arrivals from New-Orleans, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

HAVANA, Thursday, Nov. 15, 1862.

We have dates from San Francisco to the 21st ult., brought by the steamer America, from Nicaragua. She reports that 572 passengers left for New-York this morning.

The Diario de la Marina (secesh) has been violently excited by what it calls the falsehoods of the New-York papers in regard to the steamer Blanche having had slaves on board instead of cotton.

The same paper is also in a passion because of the statement that the Blanco de Garay, a Spanish man-of-war, brought slaves from New-Orleans. This is a fact. Some thirty slaves were brought in her as "servants." One family alone had six.

As to the Blanche, although every inquiry has been made, it cannot be ascertained that she brought any cotton here. No signs of any have been seen.

A gentleman who went on board of the Blanche the next day after she was run ashore by the United States gunboat Montgomery, found some of her woodwork still burning, but found no signs of cotton or ashes of cotton. The Blanche was then pretty well destroyed, while, if she had been loaded with cotton, she would have burnt for several days.

Mulata, where she went first, ostensibly for coal, is a port where negroes are frequently landed, and is not a place where coal is to be had.

The captain of the Blanche claims to have brought 120 bags of charcoal, (about 225 bushels,) a small amount of that combustible to take a loaded steamer from Mulata to Havana.

The only fact that the Diario de la Marina brings up as proof of its view of the matter is the account given of it by the captain of the Blanche before the British Consul, which, it says, is sufficient to refute the falsehoods of the New-York papers.

On the 12th instant, arrived, Spanish steamers Cuba and Pozzo del Oceano, both from New-Orleans, the former with 74 passengers. Also, arrived same day, the Bahia Honda, from Philadelphia.

Cool weather has come, which drives away sickness, and it is now not only safe, but pleasant here for foreign visitors.

We had a flying visit to-day from some of the officers of the Santiago de Cuba and the Sagamore.

The Wachusetts has left.

We are now without a representative of our navy, unless the Quartermaster's boat Rance, which came in from Key West this morning, can be called such.

The American sloop Dove came in on the 13th inst., twenty-five days from Apalachicola. She is only eleven tons burden—a new boat. She was reported by that "truth telling" newspaper, the Diario de la Marina, as a Confederate vessel. She was overhauled off St. George's by the prize schooner George E. Burroughs, just captured, taken with cotton, too, as it appears, for the rebels were transferred to the Dove, which was ordered to follow to Key West. They parted company off Tampa, were boarded and searched aboard on board, and after passing through many tribulations by sea and flood, arrived here, where she is to be refitted, to enable her to proceed to Key West.

We have had no Confederate arrivals since my last letter, and only one departure—the Confederate schooner Ariel, for Matamoras.

Business is generally dull. Exchange on the North is still at 20 per cent. discount.

CHILI.

Manifestations of Sympathy with the North—Grand Banquet to the American Minister and Dr. Mackie of the State Department—Interesting Speeches—Sympathy for Mexico.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SANTIAGO DE CHILI, Tuesday, Sept. 30, 1862.

During the brief stay in this capital of Dr. JAS. S. MACKIE, of the State Department, Washington—the able and efficient chief of the bureau to which appertains all the correspondence with our Legations in Central and South America and Mexico, now on a tour of visit to our different Legations in South America—that gentleman has been the recipient of attentions so marked and general on the part of the leading statesmen and liberals of this Republic, and so pointedly directed as an evidence of public sympathy with the United States in our great struggle for the permanency of Republican institutions on this Continent, that I cannot refrain from making special reference to them in my correspondence for your columns, in order that your readers may appreciate the feeling which exists in Chili of deep and cordial sympathy with the North.

The most marked of these demonstrations was on the 25th inst., just prior to Dr. MACKIE's departure for La Paz, Bolivia, on his return to Washington, and took the form of a grand banquet given to him by the Society of the "American Union"—an organization which has for its object the promotion of a political union among all the American States—at which were present, among other distinguished invited guests, the American Minister, Hon. THOMAS H. NELSON, and our accomplished Secretary of Legation, CHARLES S. RANDAL, Esq.

The banquet was given to the splendid saloons of the Casino, which were magnificently decorated for the occasion, the dining-hall in particular being fairly covered with the flags and emblems of every American State, and patriotic souvenirs of the revolutions of Independence. At the head of the hall, in the centre, was placed a splendid portrait of WASHINGTON, surrounded by the starry folds of flags of the United States. Opposite was the portrait of BOLIVAR, the Liberator of the South, beaming from a cloud of the various colors of the South American States. O'HIGGINS and SUCRE, placed over trophies of crowns and banners; LAS HERAS, FERIER, CAMILLO HENRIQUEZ, and others of the noble heroes and martyrs of Chilian Independence, were grouped around. FERIER enveloped in the Chilian flag, LAS HERAS covered by those of Peru and Buenos Ayres, while over a magnificent mirror the tri-color of Chili was enlaced with the flag of Mexico and the bright standard of the United States, manifesting the sympathy of Chili for every noble cause and every unfortunate people. Around on every hand, entertwined in every variety of beautiful combination that the rich fancy of the South could devise, were seen flags and emblems of the Sisterhood of Republics, the whole forming a scene of almost unequaled suggestiveness and beauty.

The guests gathered before five, and the festivities were opened at that hour by the presentation to Dr. MACKIE, all the guests remaining standing, of a diploma constituting him an honorary member of the "Union Americana."

The presentation speech of Sr. MATTA, the Secretary of the Union, with other speeches and toasts which followed during the banquet, I translate from the published account in the Vos de Chili of the 26th and 27th instant.

Señor MATTA said: "Owing to the illness of the President of our Society, I am charged with the honorable duty of presenting, in its name, to Señor MACKIE, this certificate of his election as an honorary member of the Society, as a testimony not only of appreciation and sympathy toward him personally, but as a symbol of what should be the relations between us and our masters, the great republicans of the North, the most eminent of whom looks down upon us tonight from the folds of the bright flag which overhangs our table."

The first toast was by Dr. MACKIE, to the President of the Republic of Chili, Don JOSE J. PERES, and the people of Chili.

The second was to the President of the United States, and was received with the greatest enthusiasm. In reply, His Excellency the American Minister, spoke as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN: My greatest regret in responding to these sentiments in honor of the President of the United States, springs from my very imperfect knowledge of the Spanish language, and the complete impossibility that I should be understood, speaking in English, by a great part of the gentlemen who are present. For this reason I shall be very brief. I beg to return my most cordial thanks to the gentlemen of the Committee for the courtesy of the invitation to attend this magnificent banquet, and the pleasure of joining in this festivity. I have accepted this invitation most cordially, because it has for its object not only to honor my friend and compatriot, Dr. MACKIE, but also to manifest the sentiments of friendship and sympathy which are felt by the Republicans of South America toward the Government and the people of the United States. Gentlemen, as a humble representative of that Government, I repeat to you my warmest thanks, as also for the toast in honor of that eminent statesman and pure patriot who to-day presides over the destinies of our Republic, and who, called to the Presidency in the most perilous crisis in our country's history, has complied with the duties of his high position in a manner which has inspired the confidence and veneration of honorable men of all parties, and the respect of the civilized world. The enthusiasm with which his name has been received proves to me that he is known to you, and that you appreciate the purity and the patriotism of his intentions and his conduct. I repeat, therefore, my thanks for the generous and liberal sentiments which have been manifested with respect to the Government and people of the United States—sentiments, I assure you, which are reciprocated by us in the most cordial manner, with regard to the Government and people of Chili. After more than a year of residence in your country, during which time I have visited nearly all of the provinces and chief cities of the Republic, and have mingled freely with the people, I have heard your citizens express one sentiment only with respect to the United States, and that is the most ardent desire to see our rebellion speedily suppressed, and the integrity of the Union preserved. I have not met a single Chilian who desires the destruction of our Federal Union; but on the contrary, all look upon such an event as one of the greatest calamities which could happen to humanity. And this should not cause surprise, for they well remember that with the favorable termination of the American Revolution, and consequent establishment of free institutions in the United States, began an era of revolutions which caused all the thrones of Europe to vibrate, and which resulted in the complete emancipation of Spanish America from European domination. We not only gave the example of the establishment of republican institutions, but we were also the first to recognize the independence of the American Republics, and to urge their recognition upon the Governments of Europe. For this reason it is very grateful to us to know, that while we are passing through a period of terrible trial, which places in peril the very existence of our Government, we have the sympathies of the good wishes and the fervent prayers of the good people of Chili for the favorable result of our cause. The people of Chili comprehend and appreciate the magnitude of the gigantic struggle now going on in the United States. It is not a combat for liberty on the one side, and on the other for power, as has recently been declared by a European statesman. It is not a war of conquest, or to interfere with the just and constitutional rights of any State or people, but it is a war which has been imposed upon the Government by traitors and conspirators whose end is to destroy a Government established at the cost of so much labor, of such perils, of so many sacrifices and so much blood. We are combatting to perpetuate the Government and the institutions designed by the man whose portrait now looks down upon us, and of whom it was said with beauty and with truth, that he was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." His name and his history are as familiar to your as to our own children. The name of WASHINGTON, wherever Liberty is known, causes the heart of the patriot to beat with emotion, as did the words from the lips of the prophets in olden times when touched with the fiery coal from the altar. To-day we are struggling to preserve the institutions established by WASHINGTON and his illustrious companions. But this struggle has a greater signification; it is to solve the great problem of human society, whether the destinies of mankind can be confided to a purely popular Government. For this reason it is that the gaze of the entire world is fixed with such interest upon this struggle.

While history teaches that republican Governments are perfectly adapted to resist foreign aggression—for a foreign war always tends to consolidate the popular sentiment—it is supposed that that form of Government is incapable of securing obedience to the Constitution and the laws, and of suppressing domestic dissensions. But if we demonstrate in this struggle that Republics can oblige obedience to the constitutional authorities, by suppressing the greatest rebellion the world has ever seen, the effect will be to fortify and promote popular Governments and republican institutions everywhere; and this will be settled the great problem of man's capacity for self-government. This question, therefore, is about to be determined, and with it the destiny of the United States of America, on whose side are gathered the hopes of the wise and the good of all countries. The pen of the historian is poised even to record whether the United States is to be contemplated only as a brilliant meteor which rose and disappeared in space, enlightening for a moment humanity with its splendor, but leaving it plunged in greater obscurity and desolation than before, or if it shall be converted into a fixed star which shall continue to shed tranquil and verifying rays upon the entire moral world. With reference to the results of this struggle, there is not room for the shadow of a doubt. It is true that in a struggle so portentous, which has convulsed the Union from its centre to its circumference; which has placed in arms section against section, brother against brother, which has stamped its mark upon each brow, and cast a shadow over every heart; which has desolated thousands of families, and plunged them for life into widowhood and orphanage, there may come reverses—torrents of blood may still flow, and the heart of the patriot may sink for the moment; but as certain as there is a God in the Heavens, the cause of truth and of justice will triumph in the end. The Union will be maintained, free institutions will be permanently established, and the true principles of Government will be everywhere recognized and appreciated.

Mr. NELSON proposed, in conclusion, the following toast:

The "Union Americana"—May there always exist a cordial union of sentiments, of sympathies and of interests between the Governments and the peoples of the Western hemisphere, from the Arctic Circle to Cape Horn.

Dr. MACKIE, in response to the toast, "To MEXICO and LINCOLN—To the United States, the faithful allies of Republics, whether in times of prosperity or in times of adversity," said:

MR. PRESIDENT: Standing under this flag which in all parts of the world is the symbol of liberty; seeing look down upon me on the one side WASHINGTON, the Father of my Country, and on the other, BOLIVAR, the great captain of your liberties; when I have heard the moving eloquence which has been here employed in the expression of sympathy for my country in this her hour of great conflict; and above all when I hold in my hand the diploma which you have done me the honor to present to me in the name of the "Union Americana," appointing me an honorary member of it, I am convinced that notwithstanding the hundreds of leagues which separate me from those I most love in this world, I am, to-night beside my own hearth, and I salute you not now simply as friends, but as brothers. Many times since my arrival in this "Valley of Paradise," and finding myself in the presence of your beautiful women and your courteous citizens, I have most profoundly regretted my imperfect knowledge of your harmonious language—the only language fit to transmit the sentiments inspired by beauty and by worth; but now my heart struggles under a still greater feeling of oppression, which it experiences when my tongue is vain attempts to transmit to you how profoundly I appreciate the distinguished honor you have done me, and how much I desire the eloquence of a HENRY CLAY—the great statesman of my own country, who was also one of the first and warmest friends of the independence of Spanish America—to manifest to you my thanks.

In transmitting to me the invitation to this banquet, the honorable Secretaries have been pleased to inform me that it has been prepared "not only in my own honor but in that of the sentiments I represent." Mr. President, what would I not give to be more worthy of the distinction you have conferred upon me, in selecting me as a representative man! Presenting myself among you in a character purely private and extra-official, without political object or mission whatever, I have been chosen as the object of your honors only because in me you see the American citizen, consecrated body and soul to the honor of his country, and equally loyal to the immutable principles of liberty and of constitutional government everywhere; and through me you send to the loyal hearts in the United States, an enthusiastic expression of sympathy, of hope and of adhesion, such as has never been equaled by any other assembly, or in favor of any other cause.

Ah, Mr. President, My Brothers—How can I express to you the sweetness and the value of this offering, this emanation from the free hearts of this land to the free hearts of my own.

Other nations and other peoples whom we have loved, for whom in their days of rebellion and of anguish we have wept and prayed; who are equally interested with ourselves in the great principles of free Constitutional Government; and from whom we had the right to expect sympathy and good wishes, have, one after the other, turned their backs upon us in this our hour of terrible conflict, and have even heaped upon us words of disappreciation and reproach. But how have they mistaken! for if this atrocious rebellion should triumph, which God forbid, then will every nation of free people have cause to tremble and turn pale with terror, for then the beacon of human liberty will have fallen before a tempest which will shake the earth to its very centre. But as I confide in a God of infinite justice, so do I confide in the belief that this rebellion will be speedily suppressed; for on the one hand is found the cause of liberty, of progress and of Constitutional Government, and on the other who can tell what? It is nothing more than a desperate struggle, not to maintain legitimate rights of Government, as has been falsely pretended—for these rights never been infringed—but to overthrow a nation and a Government that for the space of eighty-seven years has been a beacon light to the hopes of freemen throughout the entire world, and which, during this time, has contributed in a greater degree to the advantage of the human species and the development of the principles of liberty than the nations of olden times throughout long centuries. And this attempt to overthrow a free Government—this horrible crime against humanity and civilization, which has inundated a land before happy in blood, and which has covered it in all its extent with mourning, desolation and orphanage, until the drapery of sorrow is more familiar to our eyes than the habiliments of joy—has had its origin with the same men who, in former times, were the disturbers of the peace of our neighboring sister Republics, and involved even ourselves in the general reproach. But, gentlemen, the people who to-day control the destinies of the United States have been always your true friends, as they will always continue to be of every free people and of every just Government.

Mr. President, from the day on which I first set my foot upon the shores of Valparaiso, up to the present moment, from the highest functionaries of the Republic, from the venerable lips of such noble men and apostles of liberty as BLANCO, ALDUNATE, BELLO, and first among the first, LAS HERAS, I have heard only one uniform and spontaneous expression of feeling toward my country, and that has been of support and sympathy.

I thank Heaven that after twelve years of relations with the Republics of South America, through the medium of official correspondence, I to-day find myself among you, a man among other men, and without the restraints of the diplomatic rôle to interpose between your hearts and mine, and to hide its beatings or to check those aspirations which equally animate us all.

You have lifted the veil from the American heart, and if what I have seen and heard here could be photographed to the loyal hearts of the North, it would be worth a hundred thousand Chilian soldiers before the plains of Richmond—and the Chilian soldier, as I had already learned before I reached here, dies at his post, and never turns his back upon the enemy.

I pass now, gentlemen, from my own country and its dark shadows, to your own fair land, in its vestments of Spring—and how can I offer a worthy tribute to its freshness and its beauty, its spirit of enterprise and its prosperity; to its wise and prudent Government, and to its loyal and courteous people!

Our transatlantic friends and our brothers of the South have given the name of Yankees as a reproach to the men of the North. If by the term Yankees is meant wise administration of government, the education of the people, the organization of benevolent institutions, an universal respect for the authority of law, the prevalence of public order, and the development of commerce, railroads, telegraphs, then I say that I am a Yankee, and that although I do not belong geographically to the section termed Yankee, I glory in the name; and therefore I may say, without offence, that I regard the Chilians as the Yankees of South America.

Mr. President, I have spoken too long, but how could I say less under the inspiration of these circumstances? Permit me once again to express to you my thanks for this honor, which I accept not for myself alone, but for twenty-five millions of freemen to whom you have offered your sympathies, and to whom you may be assured they will be most precious; and I beg those to whom I now speak, when they shall hereafter meet any of those who may remember me, and who have contributed to make my visit to this country one uninterrupted chain of gracious and grateful courtesy, to tell them how much I esteem them, and that they will always be remembered, and that I shall teach my children and my friends to hold you and your beautiful country among our most cherished recollections.

Mr. President, Brothers of the "Union Americana," I ask you to accompany me in a sentiment:

The Republics of America—geographically neighbors, constituted to be politically strong—united, shoulder, heart beating to heart, and arm united, let them always march together under the banner which has for its device, "America for the Americans."

Don FERMIN ROMAIN said: "During the many years that have passed since I came to reside in Chili, never have I felt so proud as this night of being a North American; for at last I see my country well and properly understood in Chili, and I am glad of the necessity which has caused us to unite, for that necessity has caused us to know each other. And if it is certain, what my friend has just said, that the American Eagle has been a nightmare to the Spanish-American Republics, on account of its filibuster tendencies, the period of this nightmare has now passed.

All nations, gentlemen, have to suffer from some reproach—some cancer; such have been the filibusters of the United States, and Europe pointing them out to you, has desired to make you believe that the American of the North was the synonym of all the evil that existed on the Continent.

But we, with that serenity which a clear conscience always gives, have waited for the judgment of time—of that time which never falsifies the truth, and that judgment is given—that time, gentlemen, has arrived. Your presence here to-night will form an epoch in the history of South America. You have come here to clasp the hand of an American of the North, and to exchange words of sympathy with regard to the struggle which threatens Spanish America, and which now afflicts the great Republic of the North.

Here the Republic is in danger, for Europe looks upon us with an evil eye, and there an indignant people have risen en masse to preserve intact that Union which has placed them among the high nations, and to prove to the powerful dynasties of Europe how restraining—how irresistible is the power of republicanism, when millions of freemen arm themselves against a rebellion, the success of which would have been the beginning of the end of all American Republics, and the destruction of the best hopes of humanity.

The American Republics have all the same origin. All have been born of the intolerance of the mother countries, and since their independence America has never asked any other favor than tolerance, and even this favor they wish to refuse us now. Let our foes, we say to them—let us prove if there is anything in the great idea which we have read in the history of other times; let us convince ourselves whether man can or not govern himself; whether republicanism is a vain word or a splendid reality, and if it is not we will content ourselves with bowing before the worm-eaten throne of whichsoever of your imbecile despots.

Such, gentlemen, is a word, has been the cause of our terrible but immortal struggles, and Europe detested them because they found themselves amid the thunder of our cannon, and we conquered their answer, conquered their recognition.

Well, gentlemen, time has passed. We have had experience, the dream of our fathers has been realized. We are free, we are republicans, and this night there will go in the mails of the steamer, news which will prove to incredulous Europe that we are brothers.

I wish, gentlemen, that Europe, I wish that the Bilbaos and the Chevaliers, these Ministers without portfolio and without shame, could witness the enthusiasm of this gathering, and that they would ask its cause. We have heard, we should say to them, from the plains of Mexico the clanking of the chains which you threaten to place upon a free and independent people, and we wish to avert a similar fate. We are here to make ready our swords. Come, then, and tear from our brows the laurels of a century, and we will prove to the world whether we are worthy the name of republicans. These spontaneous demonstrations, gentlemen, will give a new support to my countrymen in their bloody struggle, and if the day should arrive in which you may require their aid, it will not be wanting in the hour of peril. Your cause is theirs.

I drink, therefore, that this gentle twilight which sees us gathered here, may terminate in a long night of unrest and nightmare for the despots who seek to overthrow the liberties of America.

Señor EZZAGUIRE, replying to Mr. NELSON, said: "The natural alliee of the Republics of South America are the United States of the North. A common belief in liberty and the rights of man is the chain which binds us. They were the first to recognize our independence, and to say "you shall go no further" to the despots of the Holy Alliance, combined against America. At that moment, in the history of the New World, appeared the name of MONROE, the defender of the independence of our Republics.

With truth has Señor NELSON said, that during his residence in Chili he had heard only words of sympathy for the cause of the States of the North. No Chilian fails to comprehend that the banner of democracy and of civilization floats over Washington, and that the black flag of the rebels only covers traitors without law, without country, without justice—who insult the rights of humanity. We look with sympathetic sorrow upon the Colossus which struggles in the throes of a gigantic rebellion, and offers itself as an holocaust upon the altar of principle, and we doubt not of its final triumph.

There was a time when foul blots obscured from our view the great sun of democracy of the North, but free from these blemishes which rest upon the consciences of those who are to-day in arms against the laws of their country, it again sends us its rays, which, warm and beneficent, reach our hearts. In the midst of its sorrows, it sends us words of friendship, which find a deep echo among our people."

Señor RAMN MORENO said: "Not as a private individual but as the representative of Bolivia in the Board of Directors of the 'American Union,' I have the duty and the right to let my voice be heard in this place and on the present occasion. We have drank to liberty, and yet we have just heard allusion made to slaves and slavery. In this connection I am about, gentlemen, to relate to you a simple history, yet very interesting and curious. The opulent and flourishing Empire of Brazil, said one day to the beautiful, but unfortunate Republic of Bolivia: Do you wish to stop the fountain of your revolutions? Do you wish industry, population, riches, and with them peace, well-being and liberty? Here is the Amazon, which will open to you the doors to the commerce and civilization of the world. One of your laws says: 'In Bolivia there shall be no slaves. The slave who sets his foot upon the soil of Bolivia shall be free.' Repeal or modify this law in favor of Brazil, whose system of production is founded upon negro Slavery, and which cannot, therefore, freely communicate or enter into vast commercial relations with a neighbor who calls to her territory her slaves to set them free. Brazil, in exchange, will promise to render effective and prolific of every benefit your right to the navigation of the branch of rivers. The offer, gentlemen, is marvelously tempting and advantageous, and you know that everywhere the doctrine of BENTHAM has ardent partisans.

Bolivia then replied to Brazil: 'I will think of it.' After the lapse of several years, Brazil again said to Bolivia: 'What of our negotiation?' Statesmen and legislators well know that there rests upon their shoulders an immense responsibility. The proposition was, it is true, to deliver some hundreds of negroes to their cruel masters, but how much was to be gained. It was for the purpose of giving a vigorous impulse—such as no other means could—to the commerce and industry of the country; and, notwithstanding, gentlemen, they did not do it. Perhaps they were about to impose a great sacrifice upon the country, but they refused it. Impossible! not without pain, to the loss, and Bolivia sadly replied to Brazil, "I cannot."

Further years passed, and again Brazil addressed herself to Bolivia, and said: 'Do not hope for any increase of commerce or immigration through the miserable port of Cobija. It is a physical law that the sun comes from the east, and it is a historical law that civilization also comes from the east. Let us be intimate friends. We will concede to you great privileges. But abolish or modify the law.' Bolivia answered to Brazil, and for the last time, in these three concise words: 'No, no, no.'

What has been done, gentlemen, by Bolivia, would have been done by any other of the Spanish American Republics, because if the soldiers of the independence inscribed the abolition of Slavery upon their swords, it was because it was already inscribed upon the hearts of these people.

This hatred of Bolivia to the restoration of Slavery, is the holy hatred of democracy to one of its most active and powerful enemies. The flame of Washington remains pure and unspotted, because not to apostatize his faith as a Republican, he refused the crown offered by an enthusiastic people. In her place, Bolivia, as every other Spanish American Republic, prefers to remain poor and desolate rather than purchase prosperity at the price of its democratic institutions.

The moral of this history, gentlemen, is so clear and so plain, that in its depths we cannot fail to see the true reason of the previous antipathy of Spanish America toward the great Republic of the North. Let us speak plain. The origin of this antipathy has not been, as many have believed, in the expeditions of WALKER and other filibusters, but in the antipathies of race. To the honor of humanity we can recognize that the dominant sentiment of these people has had a higher origin. We have seen in the Democratic Republic of the United States, a doubly infamous traffic allowed, which stood before our eyes in the two-fold light of an infamous public crime and a grievous private wrong; and hence our indignation—a noble and legitimate indignation—because it manifested how ardent was our love for liberty. The proofs to-day most unequivocal, in the hope we have for the Abolitionists of the North, in whom we recognize with pride our true brothers. The triumph of the North will signalize the complete extirpation of Slavery in the great Republic. I drink, therefore, to the speedy and final triumph of the North. I believe that this triumph is the only road which is open to us by which to enter into a frank and cordial alliance with the people of the United States, and to unite our blood with that of this lofty and industrious race."

Señor ROSAVERA VELASCO said: "Truly Chili should have been the first to commence the chorus of discovery against despotism; but Mexico will triumph, and the blood of its heroes will be the dark stain of emotions which will fall upon the imperial mantle of MAXIMILIAN III. I think that Mexico may be animated in this terrible struggle against France by that powerful instinct which nerved the arm of Brutus when he plunged his dagger in the heart of the tyrant of Rome."

Señor KOSSMANN—"I drink that as the war of the first Washington against Spain was his first step toward pacification, the campaign of Mexico may be the first step towards the ruin of MAXIMILIAN III."

Señor ESTAZURIS, with the Mexican flag in his hand, said: "While we are preparing for the struggle and for union, we should send the salutation of our hearts to the banner of the first soldiers that duty has called to the post of sacrifice—to the victorious flag which floated over the heights of Puebla. Chili, from its organization and its energy, had the right to this advanced post in the struggle of life or death with the despotic monarchists of Europe, and it would have filled that post as becomes a free and valiant people. But Europe will comprehend by the resistance offered by the most debilitated of our Republics what it has to expect upon the democratic soil of America.

'To Mexico and to JUAREZ—the Mexican LINCOLN.'"

Señor MANUEL ROCAFUERTE said: "At the first news of the terrible struggle now going on in the United States, to vindicate the rights of man, threatened by the Southern portion of that great Republic, and to throw off the chains of Slavery, Latin America, forgetting its just complaints, changes the hardness in its heart to a feeling of earnest sympathy, because it saw in the cause of the North the cause of justice and of truth.

At the first attacks of monarchical Europe against the independence of Mexico, and against the integrity of the great Republic of the United States, attacks directed against freedom and against democracy, Latin America saw no longer its country but in Democratic America, and one single beating of its heart served to overthrow all the barriers which had separated it from Saxon America, and which but yesterday had appeared to us well nigh insuperable. But before union with North America, is for us the union of the Latin-Republics. Yes, because by any other means there would result only annexation, absorption. Annexation is the embellishment of the land, but the disappearance of the race and of its history. This is not what we desire. We will not accept the condition of pupil, nor are we the feeble violet which, born close to the broad trunk of the robust tree, perishes in its shade.

Latin America united signifies twenty millions of free men. Strong and conscious of its own strength, it will then join hands forever with its mighty brother. America will then be the common country of all who love liberty and justice. Colossus in form, it will extend its nervous arms, and, looking to the east, it will spread in one vast expanse democratic republicanism to the confines of the world.

I drink, therefore, gentlemen, to America, united, indivisible, republican, democratic and expansive."
